At a snall's pace, it seems to her, they creep out of Philadelphia. Once the City of Brotherly Love is left behind their pace is more rapid, and at length the maximum is reached when trees and houses seem to fly past.

Avis sits counting the minutes. At Trenton they have made up eight, and it begins to look as though, after all, they may yet get in on time. If the man at the throttle knew of her mission, and sympathized with her, he could hardly have carried the train on more nobly.

with enormous results to a few.

If anything they increase their speed.

The track is in elegant condition, and the man to the cab has the reputation for the best time made on an American JAMES ROBINSON railway. Thus the fates work for the brave and the fair.

Through New Brunswick they pass like a streak of light. It is about half past ten. Then comes a stretch of country, after which Elizabeth shows up. Their speed is checked in crossing the Reading tracks, after which they race for Newark and pass through with no dows, a rush through the cut, and presently they dash upon the elevated tracks into Jersey City.

Avis is ready to leave the train as soon as it stops. The time is so short she feels daily, and at length he calls a meeting of the company from which he has reher heart flutter with deep anxiety. To lose even one boat may ruin all. This does not happen, and she presently finds the does of the company from which he has reduced to be thrown, and which is now does not happen, and she presently finds the does of the company from which he has reduced to be thrown, and which is now due to be thrown, and which he has reduced to be thrown, and which he has reduced to be thrown, and which he has reduced to be thrown, and which is now due to be thrown. does not happen, and she presently finds herself crossing the North River. A hackman holds the door of his vehicle open.

"Carriage, madam?"

A glance shows a stout animal and a driver who seems to possess determination.

"Ten dollars if you reach Wall street before noon," says, this energetic little woman, as she disappears within the vehicle.

Slam goes the door shut, With one bound the energetic Jehu gains his seat, an whirls his horses around. Ten dollars! the fee is worth striving for.

"Make way—case of life and death!"

Once over West street to Courtlandt he has overcome the heaviest difficulty. Still he urges his horses on at a gallop. Obstacles appear, but a veteren hackman is an adept at avoiding them. Now, they are in Liberty street, and nearing its junction with Broadway. Avis looks out. A jam would ruin her hopes, but such a thing seldom occurs so far down, the congestion of wagons being from the Post-Office, north.

Broadway at last. Avis breathes in relief, for her mission is a success.

Just as they turn into Wall street the time ball, on the Western Union building, drops. It is high noon, and bells and whistles proclaim the fact.

In a certain office in Wall street a number of gentlemen have congregated, Their appearance would indicate men of business standing and wealth. Thousands like them can be met with any day in this section, where meetings are being held that involve the handling of millians.

Most of them appear very anxious, and consult their watches frequently, At the first stroke of the bells announcing the mid-day hour, one of them rises and raps on a deag with his knuckles. Most of them appear very anxious, and consult their watches frequently.

The smile grows broader now. 'Ah! fate was too much for him-that train was delayed by an accident in the mountains, so I learn from the bulletins. Gentlemen, we will go on with the voting. It is all in our hands, since Doctor Jack is not here,"

The door has opened, even while he speaks, and a figure steps in. The figure of a woman, whose handsome face glows

"Madam," says the chairman of the neeting, in haste, "you have mistaken he room; the next door leads to the livorce lawyer's office." She steps forward.

"Is this the stockholders' meeting of he Rising Sun Nitrate Company, limited?" she asks, very distinctly.

The one member who had plead for delay jumps to his feet eagerly,
"Is Jeremiah Green present?"
"I am that party," he exclaims.
