SHOOTING IN ENGLAND
A Typical Day's Hunt on a Large Estate—The Finest Sport.

It is a bright December morning about 8 o'clock when we are roused from our slumbers. There is a light frost, just enough to wither the grass, and which will in a few minutes begin to yield to the sun. Break begins shooting, doubtless, by 10.30. When all is ready for the start, we assemble in the front of the house. The gunners are drawn up, and into this bundle our host's son bringing up the rear, much the air of a general moving his brigade into action. A short drive across the park, between two magnificent oak oaks overshadowing the principal turf, and we come suddenly upon a large group of men and boys. These comprise the small army of keepers, gun carriers, beaters, and relieving boys, who are employed during the day. The first named of these are permanently employed, the others being recruited from the establishment or else valets belonging to the different visiting sportsmen. The other three classes come from anywhere, though they are generally men and boys from the neighboring villages. An experienced beater in a good shooting country can make an excellent find. During the winter months, when farm work is slack, he can get a job beating several days in the week. The hours are not long and the work is not hard, while the pay of from two to three shillings a day, good for a week, and a rabbit thrown in is not at all to be despised.

THE START IN THE COVER.
We are now ready to begin the shoot, and here let me stop for a moment to describe the theory on which a day's pheasant shooting is based. The main points to be kept in mind are to give the beaters a good start, and to take the most advantage of the wind. To effect this it is important to drive the pheasant into the cover as early as possible. The pheasant is a bird of prey, and prefers flying low to soaring into the air. But at the same time, being a good sized bird, he does not like flying among thick trees. The ideal wood or cover for birds is one situated on both sides of a valley, with a line of trees on top of each hill. The home or feeding places of the birds should be placed in the middle of the valley. The birds are driven down the valley, and are driven gently, so that they shall not rise and fly away to the top of the hill. The beaters are driven out of the thick cover and fly across the valley at a good height to reach the wind blowing from the opposite side of the valley. Boys with colored flags should be stationed on the windward side of the cover to prevent the birds breaking out, which some will try to do, though the majority will keep on the other side. After one has been shot the same tactics should be repeated on the other side as desired. But few woods, however, are arranged as suitably as the opening of the hunt.

In the meantime, we have been ordered to our places. The cover is a long, narrow wood, principally comprised of young ash trees. At one extremity of the wood, from which it is separated only by a wide path, but which is surrounded by fields and lies nearly flat. Two of the guns and their attendants have taken their positions at the junction of the two woods, one on either side of the path. The other two are to stand at either end of a cross road about half way down the cover, while our host and myself are to walk parallel with the beaters along the path inside the cover. For a moment all is quiet, then the keeper blows his whistle shrilly, and the line starts. The beaters are all dressed in white smock frocks with large numbers painted in front and behind. The white is intended to attract the attention of the pheasants, and the number is to designate their position in the line. No loud talking is allowed, and as I stroll along the grassy path or "ride," accompanied by a man bearing my cartridges and a dog, and by the head keeper, the only sound to be heard is the steady, rhythmic, swish of the beaters' wings, and the sharp tapping of their sticks. Too much noise is almost worse than too little. It scares the birds while we are yet afar off, so that they run out of the wood despite of stops, and it drives the overtimid rabbits to earth long before they come within gun range.

A HUMORIST ON MARRIAGE.
Marriage, if not carried to excess, is a wise provision and a sacred obligation. It is a duty, especially as regards sex. You will never regret it. If possible, marry above your station, but straight over my head and the other side to a third rate girl. I miss her, but three out of four best so, and now she is coming on again, and for the next two or three minutes we are all hard at it. The beaters are all dressed in white, and shoot up from our side to indicate various points at which birds have fallen. In the woods behind us the boys are darting after and titter picking up the game, while the keepers, losing their retrievers, are attending to the game which has fallen in the water. And now the short winter day is closing in. The last best has been shot, and in good time, for the light is falling fast.

MONARCHS LONG LIVED.
Commenting on the fact that the Queen of Belgium has just died in her sixtieth year, a distinguished statesman says: "The ruling monarchs of today have lived to a much greater age than the monarchs of the sixteenth year, and of these latter only one was a supereger. At present the monarchs, since from fifty-one it is reduced to forty, the number of monarchs who are sixty years and over has almost tripled. In 1900 there were twenty-eight young monarchs. Fifty years ago, there were only seven, and of that number seven were septuagenarians, five had passed through their sixtieth year, and one, the Pope, was a nonagenarian. In spite, therefore, of the fact that the monarchs of today are required to encounter, it is evident that most of them have a better chance of living to old age than their subjects."

YOUTH AND DEBT ARE THE WORLD'S GREATEST STIMULANTS.
It takes pluck to acquire fruit from your neighbor's tree. Some men are pleasant to talk to, but disagreeable to listen to. Burglars are willing to enter almost any house—except a station house. Many a man finds it difficult to induce his neighbors to have a good opinion of him. The man who pays his rent must hustle, and the man who doesn't pay is obliged to keep moving. Take the case of one of some people and their most intimate friends would be unable to recognize them. Some fine examples of wild life are said to exist in the mountains of Kentucky, but they are hard to find.

A QUEEN'S DAINTY FAD.
Queen Alexandra's especial fad has a definite and a very peculiar character. It is that of having her pocket money made perfectly clear and bright before she touches it. Whenever a check is turned into hard cash for her use the coins are placed in a leather of spirits, and the purchase is taken charge of by the lady-in-waiting until it has been dressed in white muslin of process of purification.

"What makes the baby cry?" asked Ethel. "Our baby doesn't have anything to make it cry."

PERFUMES FOR HEALTH.
Woman With Scented Handkerchief a Benefactor.
To preserve one's beauty and enhance one's attractiveness, perfumes are necessary. They are stimulating and refreshing, especially lavender, lemon, rose and violet. They may prove more beneficial by destroying disease germs. The basis of all scented on the handkerchief is calculated to make it antiseptic and to destroy the germs, or, at least, to prevent their multiplying. It is a powerful antiseptic and possesses distinct properties, not less in degree than those of carbolic acid. The love of perfumes has never been the monopoly of the soubrette. Nero, the tyrant, had not only his garlands, but his perfumes. He daily sprayed with water distilled from the choicest roses of his empire. Louis XIV. was insuperably fond of the heavy scent of orange blossoms. The great Richelieu lived in rooms so filled with flower odors that his courtiers nearly swooned upon entering them. Elizabeth of England perfumed her hair with Spanish leather steeped in musk. In the bouillottes of fashion, perfumed candles were burned, and perfumed blocks or cakes were thrown into the fire. The perfume of the day is a mixture of oils and essences containing expensive scents were used.

The Boy Teacher.
He was very young, and but just graduated from college. He had his diploma, health, energy, ambition, and what often proved only a goodly empty purse. He was obliged to get work immediately, but he did not want to teach school, although one in the country was offered him. He could not see why he should be forced to do the bread of bitterness. He did not understand why he must breast the whining wail of school children, and why he should be obliged to do the bread of bitterness. He did not understand why he must breast the whining wail of school children, and why he should be obliged to do the bread of bitterness. He did not understand why he must breast the whining wail of school children, and why he should be obliged to do the bread of bitterness.

The teacher made one more earnest appeal to Mattie Warren. He told her she simply could not defy him and his rules, and remain in school. As his pupil, she must obey him, she was unmovable, and her eyes laughed back defiance into his resolute face. "What could he do?" "With sudden resolve he went again to the trustees, and insisted upon dismissing the girl from the school. "Whip her; she must be conquered," said they. "I cannot strike a girl. I will give up my position first," answered the boy teacher, with rising color and flashing eye, and the matter was laid over. Monday. All night the perplexed young educator tossed on a sleepless bed; and when morning came, the question—"What could, what must he do?"—was still racking his weary mind. "Giving up his situation meant a great deal. He could not give up his position first, and the matter was laid over. Monday. All night the perplexed young educator tossed on a sleepless bed; and when morning came, the question—"What could, what must he do?"—was still racking his weary mind.

How hard it was to leave home! Mother's face looked so tenderly kind when he was going, and she is so full of love for him, and the rooms reach out their comfortable arms to him, and his comrades, and his windows blink and smile brightly at us. The heart-felt parting of the day when the boy teacher went to school, and his windows blink and smile brightly at us. LOOKED LIKE WINNING.
A curious wager was recently made between two laborers. One of them had boasted of the steadiness with which he carried a load to any height. The conversation ended in a wager being made by the one who the other could not carry him in his hand up a ladder to the top of the building on which they were employed. The disbeliever placed himself in the middle of the third story, and made a great deal of car and exertion, succeeded in taking him up and bringing him down safely. Without any reflection of the danger he had escaped, the laborer who had been carrying the money, adding: "To be sure, I have lost; but about the third story you made a slip—then I was in hopes!"

LOOKS INTO MAN.
M. Eykmann, a member of the Royal Academy of Amsterdam, has discovered a novel method by means of which it is possible through the use of Roentgen rays, to obtain an exact photograph of any interior part of the body, even while the organs in that part are actively at work. In this way one can obtain a thorough knowledge of the movements of the heart, the stomach and the intestines. M. Eykmann has acted upon his principal invention by the use of swallowing, and experts say that his investigations have heretofore been able to explain clearly.

ALL WILL POWER LACKING
KLEPTOMANIA IS SAID TO BE DUE TO DISEASE.
Thefts From Stores by Well-to-do People in Paris Is Increasing.
Kleptomania is so much on the increase among well-to-do women in Paris that the police are resorting to a special study of the subject at the request of the proprietors of the stores, where such thefts are most common. In his report the doctor traces fully the disease, and explains its nature, which is a form of monomania, so called, because it leads to the committing of offenses which are contrary to the natural feelings, which the conscience reproves, but which the will has not the power to resist.

INSECTS THINK.
Insects think as truly as men do, although not, of course, on the same scale. This is the belief of M. P. J. B. a French neurologist, who has been making observations of ants and bees for a long time. He finds that the insects have a very high degree of intelligence, and that they are capable of making observations of ants and bees for a long time. He finds that the insects have a very high degree of intelligence, and that they are capable of making observations of ants and bees for a long time.

VICTIMS OF HYSTERIA.
Many women voluntarily confess to have been victims of hysteria. The explanation given in nearly every case is: "The temptation was too strong for me. I lost my head and many things belonging to me. I could not resist the temptation. If I had not been detected I should have been hanged."
Of 120 cases studied by Dr. Dupuisson eight women were suffering from general paralysis, and were cured by the use of the brain. Of the remaining 112 cases 100 were suffering from various diseases. This leads the doctor to conclude that a relation does undoubtedly exist between disease and hysteria.

CANADA'S WINTER PORT
The Harbor of St. John Is Never Frozen Over.
The most important feature of the recent commercial history of St. John is its claim to be the "winter port" of Canada. Its ambition to secure this name is not recent origin. It has been hoping and planning for it for half a century. Some forty years ago, or nearly so, years before the provinces were united to form the present dominion, and before either of the great railroads, the Intercolonial or the Canadian Pacific, had been constructed to bring the widely separated provinces into communication with each other, this prediction was made concerning the future of the city: "Looking at its position with regard to lower Canada, St. John must yet become the winter port of the country, if its people will work for it, in a few years it will be certain to rise to a position where it will be known as the Liverpool of America."
