PEACH BASKET HAT MUST GIVE WAY TO TOQUE RUSSE

Paris Has Also Decried That "Rais," the Marcelle Wave and the Curling Iron be Relegated to the Rear.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The peach basket is doomed. Not because of the failure of the peach crop, but because Paris decrees that no longer shall milady hide her light under a bushel.

It is place Dame Fashion has devised something new. This is the Toque Russe, or Polonais, a creation of fur built like the chapeau of a drum major, quite as high as to altitude and much higher as to price.

The new hat, which rumors have reached the country by cable, made its first appearance in this country today when the North German steamer Kronprinz Wilhelm reached her pier in Bremen.

Among her passengers was the man who made the Merry Widow bonnet famous, and who brought here the celebrated Alice Roosevelt chapeau.

This importer brought with him 200 of the new hats, and a peep into his treasure boxes permitted an advance view of what feminine America will be wearing this season.

The hats, which are made entirely of fur, are the shape of a Cossack helmet. A visor shading the eyes and completely hiding the brow leads backward and upward until the peak is reached at an elevation of twelve to eighteen inches according to the wearer's pleasure.

From the apex there extends upward a spray of aigrettes six to eight inches in length.

In the rear the toque falls to the shoulders, which it fits closely, clinging to the head like the skull cap of youth, only keeping just about the ears.

With this new creation, milady's glory—her hair—is hidden. Hence the elaborate rats, and puffs, and curls and wigs, to which she has pinned her faith and has pinned to her head, will have to be cast away.

The marcelle wave and the curling iron, too, must go, for milady's coil will be built a la baseball. It will be as plain and smooth as a brand-new leather sphere.

The toque Russe was first seen in Paris at the Chateaux d'Orleans, where it was worn by the members of the company.

It is immediately to be inspected by Mme. Rejane in her play, "L'Impatrice," and by Mme. Sorel in "La Reine." It is the latest fashion of the city.

INDIA AND LORD MINTO.

Political conditions in India have been described recently in The London Times by a special correspondent whose review is both interesting and exhaustive. The article concluded as follows:

One cannot help noting how the thoughts of responsible Indians have been to turn more and more of late to Whitehall and less to Simla and Calcutta. No good can come of such a tendency, for the Viceroy of India must be in India, and not at Westminster. It remains to be added, however, that the essential value of Lord Minto's work in India is far too little recognized and appreciated in England.

He has had to hold office during a period of storm and stress unparalleled in the memories of most men now living in India. His calmness and restraint, and his inexhaustible patience, have carried him through crises in India which would have maddened any other man.

He has made few mistakes, and has done so well for his countrymen that it is unfortunate that they still regard his work so little.

The more one studies Indian affairs the more one is driven to the conclusion that many of our difficulties are due to the fact that we have never made up our minds as to our purpose there. As a nation we do not possess the faculty of clear thinking. Benefits forced upon reluctant peoples are very soon benefits forgot.

I can see no outcome save a gradual limitation of the aims of our work in India. To hold what we have, to make concessions slowly and cautiously, is the only course.
