

not the one appointed, and the music grows very faint. At last he puts it back of the right person, and his arduous task is accomplished. The other players may in turn go out of the room and have tasks given them, but the musician generally keeps his position as long as the game lasts.

---

CXIV

ANIMALS

This is a form of Blindman's-Buff. The leader is blindfolded, and the company may remain seated or standing about the room. The leader proceeds around until he can touch some person, when the person touched must give an imitation of the noise made by some animal—a cat, pig, cow, dog, etc.—repeating it three times, if requested; and, from the voice, the leader endeavors to name the person. If he succeeds, the person named must in turn become leader, otherwise he tries again.