In God's great warfare every living soul must bear a soldier's or a coward's part. Most follow evil to a losing goal.

Saved. One winter night, thirteen years ago a man, nearly frozen, stepped into an open doorway in Blacker street, New York.

"A beggar!" "Euphemias!" The spell of silence was broken. Miss Abigail carried a large market basket.

"I hardly know what to get for the child," said Miss Abigail, taking up the thread of their life where they had dropped it so many years ago.

The years of estrangement were forgotten. Both sisters were back again in the past, making holiday for a little one.

Fifteen minutes later the shop-keepers were struck dumb with amazement to see the sisters enter the store side by side.

Oblivious to all the sidelong looks and intercepted glances, Miss Abigail and Miss Euphemias walked directly to the toy department, and were soon lost in an excited discussion as to the conflicting merits of blue eyes and black-eyed dolls.

"Hullo, Impudence," said the Turkey to the Chamberlain. "Why do you call me that?" demanded the Chamberlain, flushing.

"I remember your wife as such a dainty and pretty little thing, Humpty, and yet she told me she has turned out a fine cook!"

"Turned out a fine cook? She has turned out half a dozen of them within the last three weeks."

"What would our wives say if they only knew where we are to-night?" remarked the captain of a vessel bating about in a thick fog.

for an occupant. The dressing-case and work-table were just as they had been left so many years ago.

There was a suspicion of moisture in Miss Euphemias's eyes as she looked around, but little Sunshine gave a sigh of satisfaction as she crept down between the snowy sheets.

"Don't you think mamma knows I am here with my twin sisters? I prayed for you both every night, and I asked God to let us come some time to see Hans and Gretchen and the big organ—oh, I'm so glad!"

"Softly she crept down the stairs. The big kitchen was empty, and the little wrinkled stocking seemed to be appealing to Miss Euphemias from the fireplace.

Accompanying your Christmas presents with some cheery Christmas greetings and some Christmas greens. Be very sure that this thoughtfulness will bring its own reward, and that in the years to come the memory of the Christmas when you gave most and received least will be the happiest of all memories to you."

Scraps for Odd Moments.

Little Marie—I know what I'll do in a "engagement ring means. Algie—What? "The kisses it takes to get engaged."

She—Don't you think a football player should make a good golf player? He—The only trouble I see is that the ball might get lost in his hair.

Inquisive Tourist—And how do you find the crops this year, Murphy? Murphy—How do I find the crops, is it? Sure, your honor, it's by digging for 'em, same as ever!

Mr Sprocket—Pshaw! You can't even tell me the position of the crank on a tandem bicycle! Mrs Sprocket—I can if you tell me where you usually sit.

"Don't despair, Joe; there is plenty of room at the top." "Yet that statement, I've observed, is generally put forward by people who have never been there."

Pupil—What in your opinion, professor, is the most difficult mathematical problem? Poor Professor (grimly)—Trying to make both ends meet, my dear sir.

"I want you distinctly to understand, Emil, that when your colleague's wife has a new hat I want one, too." "Chain yourself, my dear. We've settled it between us. You're neither of you going to get one."

Mrs Tracy—You would not part with your little wife for all the money in the world, would you, my dear? Tracy—Not much. Money talks, but there is not enough of it in the world to take your place.

Keep Minards Liniment in the House. Mabel—You have been wanting some slippers. Here's your chance. A "gigantic slipper sale" is advertised in the paper.

"Hullo, Impudence," said the Turkey to the Chamberlain. "Why do you call me that?" demanded the Chamberlain, flushing.
