McLaughlin Valve-in-Head Service

McLaughlin Valve-in-Head motor cars are so designed and manufactured as to render them capable of great serviceability under a wide range of motoring conditions. Yet they are backed by a service organization of more than 2000 Canadian dealers so thoroughly organized as to make that serviceability continuous. Every McLaughlin owner is entitled to and receives prompt and efficient service—the kind that insures the uninterrupted use of his investment. Our service department is in charge of a first class mechanic with special training in the McLaughlin line. While we are not soliciting more garage work, in fact we always have more than we can attend to, we are particularly anxious that McLaughlin owners get in touch with us in case they are not getting entire satisfaction. Our interest in McLaughlin owners does not cease when the car is paid for. The importance of service in something the man buying his first car does not realize. With the stock of parts we carry, and the stock at the McLaughlin branch at St. John, McLaughlin owners on this territory have access to at least $100,000 worth of parts which can be secured within a few hours. McLaughlin parts cost less than others, taking weight and quality into consideration.

Following the session the members adjourned to the Centreville Hotel where an elaborate banquet had been prepared by the proprietor. "And they did all eat and were filled."

Masonic "At Home" a Great Event

The average mortal is never so presumptuous as to expect that a postponed affair will measure up with the same function when pulled off on the original date. Delays are always dangerous and depressing. The Masons "At Home," however, given by the members of Carleton Lodge to their brothers and families on March 9 at Centreville furnished a most pleasant surprise to the management.

The weather man was in fine fettle and obliged us with wonderfully auspicious weather conditions, an evening to prompt any young man to look up his lady fair and his hitherward.

In consequence at 8 o'clock, the hour appointed for the fireworks, the Opera House was teeming with guests who had brought along a friend of good genial disposition and displayed the glad mitt and the merry gurgles throughout the whole evening. I was curious to discover one woeful, forlorn glance or wrinkle of disappointment during the evening's dissipation, but failed to locate even an apology for one. To find a happier crowd of good mixers would prove a physical impossibility. Each one seemed bent on not only having a good time in a selfish way, but rather were inclined to make the object of their coming an evident fact and silently teach others to go and do likewise. This was the real secret of the evening's success. Mesdames McCain, Ritchie and Lee were delegated to formally receive the guests, which duty they most graciously performed, while the cordiality which everyone manifested made all present seem like one grand committee.

Knowles' Singing Orchestra from Fort Fairfield had been retained for the occasion and discoursed all the late and popular melodies in their own inimitable way throughout the evening.

The committee had also procured a well-chosen five reel feature photoplay, which along with two reels of good clean slapstick comedy made a very well balanced program of pictures, which was most heartily enjoyed by all.

At the completion of this part of the program, all were allowed to indulge in a pleasant hour of chat, in which none needed any encouragement, but where there was every evidence of good nature and good-fellowship in the jolly crowd of mixers. At 11.30 the first call for dinner in the dining car was sounded and each Hungry Hank set out to find his Luscious Lizzie, that they might participate in the disappearing act about to be perpetrated on the rich viands, whose odors were already permeating the appetizing atmosphere. This act, by the way, was the only bit of magic or legerdemain for the evening.

When all had dined and wine to their heart's content a sudden desire to trip the light fantastic seized the majority, and the main floor was soon cleared of any encumbrances or obstructions, and when the Grand March was called on a stampede arose to see who could get on the floor first. All ages were represented and "Even the gray grandsire skilled in gestic love There frisked beneath a burden of three scores."

The merry making was not suspended until the wee sma' hours, when all went their several ways even more cheerful and happy than they had come. Each and all reiterated the fact, that they had enjoyed a most wonderful evening and without a suspicion of prevarication we took them at their word.

We only can express the anticipation that this function may only be the first of a series to be held in the near future at the different towns in turn where our craftsmen ply their Masonic arts, for affairs of this nature promulgate a fund of good fellowship which pays most satisfying dividends.

Self-Preservation --- The First Law!

In the material as well as the physical, this certainly is the first thought of all mankind and it seems to us that it is usually applied when we protect our barns, stock and crop from the ravages of lightning by installing
