Educational Matters Were Discussed at the Commercial Club's Monthly Meeting

Over-Crowded Curriculum Declared to Be Undermining Health of Many Pupils in the Public Schools—Discussion Follows Address by General Secretary of the National Educational Council of Canada—Will Have More Addresses on Educational Subjects

Major F. J. Ney, M. C. of Winnipeg, general secretary of the National Educational Council of Canada, was the speaker at the regular meeting of the Commercial Club held at Washington's cafe last evening.

He stated that in his visits across Canada he had been struck with the fact that there was a lack of educational unity, and could not help but wonder at the lack of interest in the united welfare of the East and West. It struck him that East was truly East and West was West. If nations were to benefit as a result of the war, an effort must be made, the conditions must be recognized, and the straightening out line be found to be educational.

He referred to the wonderful work of surgeons and chemists during the war and stated the rise in educational advantages to compare with the rapid rise of the sciences had not been noticed. He did not mean to strike any particular educational system, but thought the fundamental principles of the whole system needed a change for the better. Determination was what was needed to start with. Self and no service seemed to be the watchword of education today.

The call of war had been a source of inspiration to many noble young men to offer their lives for their country, but it was pitiful that this spirit could not be drawn upon in times of peace; if it could, the result would create a truly wonderful world.

If the educational facilities of the country were developed along the right lines people would feel there was just as much to live for in time of peace as in times of war. He referred to the words of one father who, in looking at the grave of his only son who had given his life in Flanders, stated that he did not begrudge the sacrifice to the Empire as long as the Empire would not forget it.

Want a Bureau in Canada.

Referring to the present day organizations, he stated that there was a multiplicity of these which were doing more or less good work but which if co-ordinated with educational interests would do a world of good. If all could be co-ordinated into one great link to direct the unified work of the one united organization, it would simplify and direct the remedy for the great problem in education. The one thing needed in this country, now more than ever, was a Bureau of Education from which any information might be secured relative to the teaching systems of the various provinces. The mistakes and successes of the various systems. If the education was to be national it must be co-operative. The Bureau of Education was moving for the establishment of such a bureau in Canada, not with the idea of centralizing or standardizing it under the scope of the Federal Government, as the provinces would all object to this, but the aim of the Council is to have the provincial departments agree to a clearing house under the power of the National Council.

He referred to the educational facilities of Quebec, saying that the system there had some advantages better than other systems throughout the Dominion. In Quebec the authorities had combined both commercial and cultural education. So many people in the East regarded culture with suspicion because they thought it was autocratic, and to teach anything of this nature was regarded with suspicion.

Referring again to the Bureau, he said that its establishment would take a lot of time, as there was so much provincialism to be overcome, and so much misunderstanding to be cleared up.

University Extension Work.

One means of waking the country to real education was university extension work. It was the securing of the services of men with a message, who could be obtained to induce the public of a better realization of what education stood for in the building up of a nation. Propaganda was necessary in this work. Referring to the work of the teachers and the contributions they made to the community, he stated that few realized of what importance this contribution was. Teachers grew old in our midst and their work was not recognized. Seventy-five per cent of the teachers of the country was composed of young girls whose principal object in life was to marry, so that the young men must be looked upon as the permanent force in the educational work.

Major Ney referred to the practice of having one standard text book in the grades of a school which the pupils, in their lessons, went through so often that they were sickened of reading, and as a result lost all their love for literature of a good and lofty nature. There was practically nothing for them to take an interest in but that one text book, and they were held to it and taken through it time after time. Proper text books were needed and one of the aims of the National Council was to secure them.

At the close of Major Ney's address, P. J. Hughes, on behalf of the members of the club, moved a vote of thanks to the speaker, stating it was an advantage for the business men to be reminded of the advantages and necessities of education. The educational problem, he said, was one of the greatest confronting the country at the present time, and this must be dealt with thoroughly.

J. J. F. Winslow seconded the vote of thanks and this was tendered by R. W. McLellan, Town Clerk.

Mr. Winslow then stated that as it had been found that no further legislation had been found necessary in order for the city to appoint a Town Manager, if desired, nothing further had been done along this line by the committee appointed. He stated he had a suggestion for the next meeting of the club—that it take up the question of assistance to the University of New Brunswick, an institution which had greatly benefited the city

Dr. B. C. Foster's Views.

Dr. B. C. Foster stated that he had not come to the meeting to participate in a local squabble and he thanked Major Ney for the excellent address which he had listened to, stating that he could clearly see that the aims of the National Council were to awaken the public sentiment to a realization of what education really meant. He was against the commercializing of education and stated that the common tendency was to think that unless it brought the almighty dollar there was no use in it. He stated that the aim of education should be to make the teaching profession merely as a stepping stone to something else, but those who would follow it for the good of the community should be in the service. Seventy-five per cent of the education of the country was in the hands of young girls and only six per cent of the teachers were men. Nothing would be gained from education unless there was sufficient inducement for more men to enter the profession and this practically required a missionary spirit. The women in most cases were fitted for teaching the lower grades but in his opinion the upper grades should be in the hands of men. Concerning the remarks of Mr. McLellan, Dr. Foster advised that an investigation be made into the breakdown and wreckage to see if the causes of these were not found other than in the over-studying.

Dr. W. H. Orville thanked Major Ney for his admirable address and stated that he was in a schoolroom today where only nine pupils out of a class of forty had escaped measles and other diseases.

Curriculum Over-crowded.

Fletcher Peacock stated that in his visits to the various parts of the country he had found that the question of the over-crowded curriculum was the cause of a universal groan.

On the motion of Mr. Winslow, seconded by N. W. Brown, Mr. Peacock was invited to address the next meeting of the Club.

P. J. Hughes agreed with former speakers that the question all narrowed down to an over-crowded curriculum and that the blame did not fall on the teachers or trustees. He referred to the troubles of the local school board, stating that the question there was one of more money. Whenever a new fad came along, he continued, it was accepted and put on the curriculum and it was time that the bedrock of the system—the training of the young minds—was gone back to.

N. W. Brown stated that he, too, believed the matter arose because of the over-crowded curriculum and he thought that the suggestion which Mr. Tweeddale, then Minister of Agriculture had made with reference to the appointment of a commission to recast the text books, was a splendid one, and one to act on. He was sorry that one face was missing from the faces of those present, the owner of which might well be interested in these matters. Never in the history of the country schools was education at so low an ebb as at the present time.

After the singing of the National Anthem the meeting came to a close.
