A Wealthy Poet.

Samuel Rogers, who was born at Stoke Newington in 1763 and died at his house in St. James's Place, on December 18th, 1855, achieved in his day considerable reputation as a poet. Of his works, probably the "Pleasures of Memory" and "Italy" are the best remembered; but, fortunately for himself, he was not dependent upon poetry for a livelihood. The head of a private banking house, he always possessed a substantial fortune, and it was as a man of taste and letters, as a patron of artists and authors, and as the friend of almost every notable man for half-a-century and more, that Rogers principally engaged the public attention. At his celebrated breakfast parties, persons of almost all classes and pursuits were to be found. In this way, he made the morning meal famous as a literary rallying point, and during the London season there was scarcely a day on which from four to a dozen persons were not assembled round his hospitable board in St. James's Place. There, discussions about books or pictures, anecdotes of the great of old, some witty sayings of Sheridan, Erskine, or Horne Tooke, some special trait of Fox, some apt quotations or fine passage read aloud, some incident of foreign travel recounted—all flowed on without restraint and charmed the hours until noon. A shrewdness and distinct acidity of sarcasm characterized Rogers's talk, and it is certain that not a few of his friends regarded his powers in that line with apprehension. In fact, it is recorded that, when he was present, there was evident among the company an unwillingness to be the first to leave. Yet he was a generous and charitable man, of whom it was said truly, that his purse ever was open to distress and that merit always found in him a discerning patron.

Where Loss is Gain.

Among the striking features of the humane convention at St. Paul was the stereoscopic exhibition of the financial losses sustained by the meat packers and railroads through cruel treatment of livestock in transit. A representative of the Institute of American Meat Packers stated that 3,716,141 pounds of meat in 1918 had to be removed on account of bruises to cattle; that the total loss that year in pork from injuries to hogs was 15,254,000 pounds; that the corn required to raise this amount of lost pork was 1,605,900 bushels. Pictures were thrown upon the screen showing the bruises, cuts, etc., sustained by the animals as seen when dressed.

Then came photographs of the clubs, prodpoles with sharp metal points, and whips which drovers and others used in handling cattle, sheep and swine. This expensive campaign now being carried on by the railroads and packers is purely from the point of view of profit and loss. The published report makes no appeal to the men who handle these animals except on the ground of financial loss. "Stop abusing livestock," it says. "Every blow means a bruise. Bruises means wasted meat." We rejoice for the animals' sake that at last the financial loss incurred by cruelty is resulting in the animals' gain—Our Dumb Animals.
