Agnes had rubbed up her mother's silver, and arranged it, with their small stock of china, upon the sideboard, and even though it was a somewhat meager array, it looked very bright and pretty.

She had also hung three or four petures, which served to break the bare stretch of white walls. In the fire-place she had laid some wood and cones, and placed a couple of vases and one or two placed a cou other ornaments upon the pretty mantel

Mr. Archibald gave a grunt as he took in with one glance all these accessories, but whether it was one of satisfaction or disapprobation, neither Mrs. Walton nor Agnes could quite determine. But he partook of his supper with evident relish, though he made no remark upon linen and cutlery that adorned their

"Hum! One piece sheeting, four table-covers, two dozen napkins, two dozen towels—who is to do all the sewing on these things?" he demanded, suddenly breaking off in the midst of the list.

"Agnes and I will see that everything is properly made," Mrs. Walton quietly responded.

"Hum! and what do you expect to get for it?"
"Nothing, sir. I regard such work as a part of my duty here," the lady said, with some dignity, at which Mr. Archibald gave one of his characteristic abundless.

After tea he went wandering about the different rooms, but making no comment until he had inspected everything in the pretty double parlors. Where do you expect to sleep?" he ked, abruptly, as he saw no bed in Agnes enlightened him regarding that

"Sing me a tune, if you can," he com-manded, and, Agnes, smiling at the form of his request, sat down, and sang, with a sweet voice and unassuming manner, "The Dearest Spot of Earth to Me is Home, Sweet Home," that lovely thing which Adelaide Phillips used to sing so beautifully.

"Well, 'tis rather pleasant to have home in ship-shape," the man remarked, when she finished the piece, and, turning he left the room without further

The girl was an accomplished adven-Her mother before her had been a beautiful but spoiled and willful child, the daughter of a Mrs. Pomeroy who had married Joseph Archibald Trowbridge's father, a wealthy farmer of New York State.

When he was thirty and she twenty—as he had told Laura—she had promised to marry him. his home. up. eccentric man, but she knew well enough that she could never profit by her step-father's wealth unless she became his son's wife, and so, for the sake of a promising future, she engaged herself to Three months later she met a man who, though even older than her lover, had power to arouse a real passion in selfish heart.

Having become a member of Mr. Trowbridge's family at so early an age, she had grown up known as Laura Pomeroy Trowbridge, and she had been introduced by the latter name to her new admirer. admirer.
Belfeving her to be really the daughter of the rich farmer, the designing man-for he was nothing else—had proposed a secret marriage, and they had eloped, salling a few days later for Europe, whither the willy schemer had been sent whither the wily schemer had been sent as an agent for a wealthy firm in New York city.

When he finally learned the truth—that his wife had no legal claim upon the man whom she called father—he accused her of having wilifully deceived him. An exciting scene ensued, in which she by no means meekly bore his abuse, and which resulted in his heartlessly deserting her, only a few weeks before the birth of her child.

When Laura was born the young the sent fall.

doing, and asking for money to defray her expenses home.

Mrs. Trowbridge had died quite suddenly only a month previous. As Mr. Trowbridge chanced to be away at the time, the letter fell into the hands of his son, Anna Pomeroy's filted lover.

Though he had loved the girl with the one love of his life, her treachery and desertion had entirely annihilated his affection, and aroused a bitter contempt for her. Still, he could not endure the thought that she and her child were suffering for the necessaries of life, and out fering for the necessaries of life, and out of the kindness of his really great heart he answered her letter, telling her of her mother's death. He informed her that as his father's health needed recuperation he had left home to travel indefinitely, while he (young Trowbridge) was taking charge of the estate, with a housekeeper to look after the house. He inclosed a draft for two hundred and fifty dollars, and promised that he would fering for the necessaries of life, and out fifty dollars, and promised that he would send her the same amount quarterly as long as she might need it. No mention was made in the letter of her ever returning to America—no offer of a home, no word or hint to betray that he still cherished a spark of af-fection for her; and Anna Pomeroy, up-on receiving it, wept the bitterest tears she had ever shed.

It was a noble generous thing for the man thus to provide for the woman who had so wronged him; but she did not half appreciate it, although she had the grace to write and thank him for his goodness. She soon grew to expect the quarterly allowance as her rightful due quarterly allowance as her rightful due, while, being a really smart and ener-getic woman, she ere long began to look about for some way to increase her income, and enable her to secure the luxuries she had always hitherto enjoyed.

much more cheaply in London than at home, and every year she put away something for future emergencies. She gave Laura an excellent education and every possible advantage, and the girl was both bright and smart, inheriting all her mother's beauty and the lack of principle in both parents—If one can inherit the "lack" of anything.

As she had told Mr. Archibald, she hated study, but had been obliged by her mother to apply herself. She loved music, however, and was, therefore, a good musician. She was also an excellent mimic, and, possessing boundless confidence in her own powers, had all the characterists which go to make a ood actress. From the time she was nineteen until she was twenty-four-her age at the time of her introduction to us-she had made quite an income for herself as a concert accompanist and an under-study at one of the theaters of the city.

She had seen Mrs. Remington one day during an excursion to the Isle of Wight, and she had at once been attracted to Max because of his fine appearance, and also because of another reason, of which more hereafter.
On relating to her mother what had occurred during this outing, Mrs. Pom-eroy, who had resumed her maiden name after desertion of her husband, became very much excited over the mat-"Here is a chance to make our fortune, Laura," she had said. "Did you learn where they are stopping":

"Yes; at the Langham, where there is a large party of Americans." Mrs. Pomeroy, still laboring under great excitement, repaired at once to the Langham, where, by some means, she learned a good deal regarding Mrs. Remington's history, although she was very careful not to come in contact with either that lady or her son ning scheme she had conceived.

But she was destined never to see her carried out, for she was sudde plot carried out, for she was suddenly stricken with paralysis, brought on, probably, by the excitement occasioned by the prospect of returning to her own country, and the daring project she had in view, and she only lived a few days, during which she was unable either to speak or move. speak or move

BASEBALL. NATIONAL LEAGUE SQUABBLE. New York, March 29 .- Justice Truax, in he supreme court, today handed down decision in the National League base ball fight, over-ruling a demurrer made by the Spalding interests against pro-ceedings begun by Freedman. The de-cision gives Spalding leave to withdraw the demurrer and to enter an answer to the complaint on payment of costs. The suit was begun last December, when Freedman obtained a temporary injunction restraining Spalding from example in a second of the second of cising any of the functions of presient of the National League, to which e was elected at a meeting of the ational League held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. It was alleged in the plea or an injunction that the election was as a quorum was not present at void, as a quorum was not present at the time. Those who participated in Spalding's election were representatives of the Pittsburg, Chicago, Brooklyn and Philadelphia clubs. Spalding demurred to the complaint, on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject the action; that the plaintiffs had no gal capacity to sue; that there was a efect of parties plaintiff; that there was defect of parties defendant, and that he complaint did not state facts suffi-tent to constitute a cause of action. It cient to constitute a cause of action. It is understood that at the meeting of the National League to be held in this city next week, A. G. Spalding will not officiate as president, being still restrained by order of the court. By the terms of Judge Truax's decision N. E. Young is still president of the league, since it is contended that no election has been held since 1990, when Mr. Young was chosen for a stated term of years. It will be months before the original complaint can be heard in trial procedings, and during that time it will be necessary to agree upon a policy by which the league can upon a policy by which the league can be operated.
