It was announced at the Japanese headquarters on the 15th that the siege guns would be in position and ready to begin a bombardment on the 20th. The Associated Press correspondent on his arrival there was welcomed by Gen Nog!, who said he was just in time to see the conclusion of a successful campaign and the capture of Port Arthur. It was evident that a general attack had been planned. The railroad to Port Dalny was taxed to its capacity in bringing troops, siege guns, am-munition and supplies to the front, and the roads were crowded with marching troops and transports.
