Undertaker B. D. Humphrey Testifies Concerning the Fearful Crushing of the Deceased's Head - Mrs. Avlesworth Makes Her First Appearance in Court During the Afternoon-An Outline of the Policy Adopted by the Crown

One and one-half witnesses were all that the principal actors in the Hyams murder trial were able to dispose of during the six hours' session yesterday : that is to say, the evidence of one witness was completed, while the second was still on the stand when the hour for adjournment had arrived. It was not an interesting day, so far as the spectators were concerned, as the testimony dealt entirely with the circumstances existing in and about the warehouse directly after the killing of Willie Wells.

As on the day before there was no rush for seats in the court room, and at no time during the day was the capacity of the stuffy little court room taxed. Mrs. Aylesworth in Court. During the early part of the afteroon session, there came into the court noon session, there came into the court room, taking a seat directly behind the prisoners' dock, a little lady dressed in the deepest mourning, her face hidden from view by a heavy vefi. This interested spectator of the proceedings was Mrs. Ebenezer Aylesworth, wife of the Crown's principal witness, and sister of the dead boy and Mrs. Harry Hyams. Notwithstanding her close proximity to the prisoners, neither of the twins was aware of her presence, and Mrs. Aylesworth departed quietly with her husband at the adjournment of the session.

The Uncertainty of Mr. Humphrey.

The Uncertainty of Mr. Humphrey. Almost the entire morning session was devoted to the examination of was devoted to the examination of Undertaker Humphrey, who, it cannot be said, owing to his inclination to contradict himself whenever closely pressed by counsel, made a good witness. Mr. Humphrey seems to be possessed of a memory wonderfully vivid on some important points and sadly deficient on other matters of equally grave importance. He remained, however, unshaken in his testimony concerning the hour of his call to the fatal cellar on the morning of the "occurrence," and, in this, made an excellent witness for the Crown.

The Versatility of Mr. Fox Ninetieth Battalion to Have Its Affairs The last 20 minutes of the morning and the entire afternoon sesion were taken up with the testimony and cross-examination of Expressman taken up with the testimony and cross-examination of Expressman Joseph Fox, the only party, other than the prisoners, Coroner Aikins and Dr. King, who saw the body of Wells as it lay bathed in its life-blood on the morning of his tragic death. Fox was necessarily a Crown witness, owing to his immediate knowledge of the circumstances of the tragedy, and the business carried on by the prisoners, but his cheery smile of recognition as he passed the dock where the prisoners sat on leaving the Court at the noon recess, his frequent glances while in recess, his frequent glances while in the witness box to the faces of his the witness box to the faces of his former empolyers, and his ready replies and hearty assent to all that Mr. Lount, counsel for the defence, asked or suggested, plainly indicated that he was not without a great deal of sympathy for the diminutive twins.

A Discrepancy Somewhere.

In his testimony on Wednesday Dr. King, in speaking of the injuries to the body, and the condition in which he found it when called to the ware-house on the morning of the tragedy, stated that the head was pressed into confed speak with the appropriate form. stated that the head was pressed into a conical shape, with the apex at the top and back, indicating that the pressure had been largely from the side of the head, and nearer to the face. This statement was of great value to the defence, bearing out, as it did, the theory of the lines of force set up by their medical testimony. Undertaker by their medical testimony. Undertaker Humphrey's evidence as to the shape of the head entirely offsets this, howwas allowed to go unchallenged in ross-examination.

Rev. J. A. Stringer, who was sent out by Wycliffe College in 1893 as a misionary to Esquimalt, is in the city on his way home on a visit. He expects to pass the winter in Toronto.

Another point brougth out by the testimony of Mr. Humphrey was that the basement was dark, and that if Dr. King's description of the position of the body be accurate, some person had changed it very materially before had changed it very materially before the arrival of the coroner. The theory, of the crown is that when the prisoners learning that the coroner was coming and fearing he would suspect foul the gloves on the hands to give color to their story that an accident and an accident alone had robbed poor Willie Wells of his life.

While it may appear to the onlooker, nungry for something sensational, that the proceedings up to date have been dull, stale and unprofitable, it is the opinion among counsel and others fully conversant with the details of the case that Mr. Osler and his fellow-counsellors are adopting a much more likely method of procedure than that followed during the former trial. In presenting Witnesses King, Humphrey, Fox and others whose testimony bears on the finding of the body, and the condition of the Colborne-street cellar, it is evident that they are bent on creating in the minds of the jurges a reason. ing in the minds of the jurors a reasonable impression that a murder has ance on Willie Wells' life and the gob-bling up of the $30,000 by the prison-ers after his death will prove the mo-tive which lay back of the alleged crime, and leave the defence in a posi-tion where they must absolutely show by a preponderance of evidence that their clients are guiltless, in order that the Hyams boys may not suffer that the Hyams boys may not suffer an adverse verdict at the hands of the
