Queen Victoria's Prince Consort. The Queen pours out her second father, Leopold I., in her angulsh as she had done in the Ideal Laxative Letters.

The Toronto Globe has the following special cable from London, England: "Queen Victoria's Letters," edited by A. C. Benson and Lord Esher, and published last week, are stated in the preface to form "what is probably the most extraordinary series of State documents in the world."

They are a measurement of industry series in the state of the ancholy childhood."

On June 19, 1837, the then Princers Victoria wrote to her uncle, in orming him of the imminence of the death of William IV. In speaking of her expected accession she said:
"I look forward to the event, which, it is a speaking of the control seems, is likely to occur soon, with almness and quietness. I am not alarmed at it, and yet I do not suppose pyself quite equal at all. I trust, owever, that with good-will, honesty and courage I shall not, at all events, all." This letter concluded with the ope that "the All-Power'ul Being, the hones letter with the control of the course letter.

valuable advisor. To think that all this is gone, that this great and im-mortal man belongs now to history, and no longer to the present is a truth which we cannot realize." There are many letters referring to the Crimoan war. One speaks of the 'dread ul and incalculable consequences of war weighing upon my heart." Another quotes Shakespeare's words, 'Powers of criterious and the consequences of the consequences of the consequences of the consequences. Teware of entrance to a quarrel; but being in bear't that the opposed may beware of thee," as being deeply engraved on the hearts of all Eng-

They are a monument of industry and an enduring testimonial of devotion to the sanse of right and a powerf stimulus to pairdotism. Never before has the country been taken in to the confidence of a Monarch with such frankness and lack of restraint.

The letters published in these three bulky volumes cover the period of 24 years that elapsed between her accession in 1837 and the death of the Prince Consort in 1861. There are some letters referring to the Queen's early life, in which the writter refers to Uncle Leopold I., King of the Belgians, as providing the "brightest epoch of my otherwise melantics and part of the was worthy, and I will not envy him, only pray that mine may be perfected.
