The wearisome waiting for the Champiain monument, the uncertainty which has attended the completion of this memorial must, in spite of the enthusiasm under which it was first projected, act as a damper on the spirits of those who plan other works. The men who now are arranging for the monument to Sir Leonard Tilley must be possessed of unusual energy when they so actively undertake what in St. John appears to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task, yet there are few papers to be a difficult task. Sir Robert Bond's party has apparently been defeated in the Newfoundland elections. The lead gained by Sir Edward Morris as shown by the early Edward Morris as shown by the early returns is too great to be overcome. After all, Newfoundland is more anxious to have the confusion ended than it is worried about the claims of either party. It has been in a state of turmoil for seven or eight months.

By Silas McBee, Who Recently Spoke in St. John — The Church Caters to the Classes and Socialism to the Masses.

In St. John appears to be a united task, yet there are few names that are more deserving of honor, few men whose careers have brought greater distinction to their home provinces, than are to be recognized in the personality and life of Sir Leonard Tilley. It may be argued that St. John needs many things more than it does costly monuments. This is true enough. It is a pity to see thousands of dollars spent on such a project when little children are suffering from exposure and hunger. But the erection of this or any other monument will not lessen the relief so generously bestowed on those who suffer; no child will lose a crust because a monument is being erected, but on the contrary the lessons taught by the dally reminder of one who gave his best efforts for his people will help in the development of that spirit of humanity through which alone can lasting good be accomplished.

employes in the public service have genuine grievances. Favoritism and political influence outweigh merit to a scandalous extent and much of the work is woefully underpaid. Moreover, some of the chiefs, like the odious Simbons them the government is compellation. some of the chiefs, like the odious sim-yan, whom the government is compell-ed by principle to upholi for the mo-ment, are utterly unfit for their high position. wider direct support from kindred or-ganizations than they received in March, and serious interruption of the general railway service is to be fear-ed. The government, however, is stronger in two important directions.

It is within the power of the strikers still to inflict enormous damage and inconvenience, and if they resort to sabotage—that is injury to person and property—as is quite probable, the blow to France will be severe and lasting.

As for the general labor situation in connection with the threatened general connection with the threatened general strike, the outlook is not so serious as is commonly feared. Organized labor by no means represents the majority of the French working classes, and it is torn by fundamental dissensions. The line is sharply drawn between collectivism and syndicalism. The state is the object of the admiration of the collectivists, while the syndicalists regard it as their arch enemy.

The issue is so sharply drawn that civil war is openly threatened, but France stands in no serious danger today as between these two elements. The agitation has been so prolonged and the unrest so widespread that many would welcome a decisive struggle at the present moment in order to clear the air. Take it all in all, French ANER'S success is due to his ability affairs promise to present a spectacle of genuine interest for the next few weeks.

This is the crux of the struggle now impending and the authorities are determined that even the republic itself shall stand or fall by it. The government threw down the gage of battle leaders of the new and illegal society today by summarily dismissing the of postal employes formed for the purpose of demanding terms from the authorities.

A communication was read from J. Hunter White complaining of the board's delay in passing upon his request for the use of the West Side warehouse in the storing of molasses. In consequence of the indifference of the members the letter pointed out that it had been definitely decided not to bring the molasses to this port.

Ald. McGoldrick explained that the board had already granted the request, but that nothing could be done without the approval of the Common Council. Ald. McGoldrick was reminded by his worship the mayor that the request was first received in February. The letter was ordered filed.
