"You know me, I don't know you. You say time doesn't count, but Iam very much afraid it does. Wouldn't it be awful if—say—, in six months—you realized that I was the one person on earth you hated most?"

As she went away, Mrs. Lingfield said: "I am going to see how poor Beth s. I thought her looking so terribly. It last night."

ill last night."

Drusilla, sighed sharply.

"This is a slap at me," she said. "I am supposed to be neglecting Beth. Though she hasn't said it openly, I know Aunt Edith was furious because I went away this summer, and specially furious because I stayed at Braske. She always wants to go there herself; and Kitty Deravan won't ask her."

Before her lover could say anything, the girl had gone on rather hotly:

"It is not true! Beth is not ill. Headaches are not serious. Oh!"—she caught her breath sharply—"oh, I couldn't bear to be happy if Beth were ill!"

Carlingford possessed himself of her hands once again.

"Then you are a little bit happy?"

"Just a little bit," said Drusilla.

And she blushed as she made the con-

He laughed at this, but he still looked serious.

"But that is the sort of thing that does happen over and over again; everybody will tell you so. The proper sort of marriage is one," said Drusilla wisely, "when two people have known each other for ages and ages, and have got so tired of each other's faults that they really haven't got the spirit to quarrel with one another."

"The proper sort of marriage," said Carlingford, "is that in which two people love each other and grow together in sympathy closer and closer, as they grow older."

"Well," said Drusilla, "if I have to marry you I want a five years' engagement."

"Five weeks you mean" he apswer."

"I don't mean to tell Aunt Edith anything about it until she goes away. I mean to scandalize her," said Drusilla, salt, suddenly addressing the maid, "that Miss Heromorth has not been writing the morning?"

"Indeed, and she has, miss! There was such a lot of things come for her that she said she must answer. The usual begging-leters, miss—most of them. Some pretty bad cases, too, if when two was written was true."

"STAR."

The crisp refreshing weather of autumn makes it all the more pleasant to attend the Star's Theatre's fine shows, and tonight a bill of especial interest awaits the throngs. The leading picture is a drama of the sea, a tale among the fisherfolks, entitled "The Fisherman." The realistic water scenes, the accident to the boat and other phases in this film will make it very absorbing. "One of Edison's merriest comedies is forthcoming in "He Tried on Handcuffs," and a drama of more than usual quality in "Under a Powerful Spell." Miss Annie Edwards will conclude her engagement at the Star this week to take a trip honde to England. She is to be succeeded by a soprano from Boston, a young lady of excellent vocal abilities.
