BY THE SUN FAIRY.

Willie was a bright boy of six years and | "and I was carried with the water because ad just entered the kindergarten, so he I had no wings to fly. Then I came through did not know much about geography. One the pipes into the bowl, and here I am to day his aunt gave him a globe, and he soon learned the location of Buffalo, where he lived.

different places on the little round globe, flying through the window, first a few, then says a writer in the New York Tribune, and his aunt explained that the earth and Jupiter and the other planets are shaped Jupiter and the other planets are shaped like it, and that all of them travel around the sun. the sun.

Willie thought for a moment, and then

"I wish I could go to the edge of the earth and look over. What would I see, aunty?"

"You would see the sky, as you do now. "What is the sky made of?" "The sky is made of air," said his aunt The little boy looked doubtful, and asked: "How do you know, aunty? Have you ever been there? Perhaps I'd better ask namma when she comes home; she'll really know what the sky is made of." That night, as Willie lay thinking it all over and wishing that his mamma was there to tell him what the sky is made of, suddenly he saw standing before him a beautiful fairy, whose dress seemed to be made of spiders' webs, glistening in the moonlight which came through the window.

"I'll tell you what the sky is made of," aid a sweet voice, "because I have been there; but, oh, dear, I have lost my wings and can never go again." As the little fairy said this a shadow seemed to come across her face, as if some dark object had come between her and the moon. "If they've dropped off by mistake per haps you'll find them again somewhere,

"No, I was a sun fairy, and the king o the fairies took them away," said Radia (for that was her name), shaking her head sadly.

"How mean! What made you let him?" "Well, to tell the truth, I suppose I de-served it," said Radia, slowly and hesitattimes I'm not good, and mother puts me to bed without any supper, but I grant thereof, and comprisin lots of land of fifty acres, pu never had wings. I should think it would stay till my wings grow again. They are beginning to grow now." As Radia peered over her shoulder Willie could see tiny rainbow wings just coming out. Then he saw around Radia, and helped her as though she were a wounded bird. "Come," they said, are small, they'll grow." Willie shut his eyes for a moment, and when he opened them the morning sun was hining through his window, but he could see no fairies.

The maid romarked with surprise that Willie did not cry when his face was washed Wilhe did not cry when his face was washed the next morning. Indeed, he did not no-tice even the scap in his eyes, so anxious was he to keep them open and not miss the sun fairy, should she appear on the water. He thought he caught a glimpse of her sev-eral times in the scap bubbles, but he was not out a sure not quite sure. When Willie's mamma came home he told her of the sun fairy's visit. "Oh, mamma," he said, "I forgot to ask her what the sky is made of. Now, you tell me."

A telegram reached the bishop's palace Thuraday from a priest in Portland, Me., stating that a John Daley, aged 36 years, had been killed in that city by a train, and that it was thought the unfortunate man had relatives at Loch Lomond, and if so, it was asked that they be notified. Telephone communication was had with Sterling Bark-er, of the Ben Lomond House, last evening, and it was ascertained that a Hugh Daley lived near the lake. He has two sons, John, living at home, and Hugh, in New York. It is not known who the John Daley killed in Portland could have been. and a spurt we went into a great white bowl. I was glad to see the light once more, and even to hear a cross voice say: d don't want my face washed; you always get the soap in my eyes.'" Willie blushed conscionsly. "That was yesterday morning. You must have been in the water pipes. But, say, where were you when the wall was around you?" "In the reservoir, of course," said Radia pits me to be' without any supper, but a never had wings. I should think it wuld be jolly."

"It is. You creeping mortals don't know what journeys a sun fairy can take. Why, I and the other fairies used to coarry water drops away oft to Jupiter (which is a bigger world than this) quicker than you can say Jack Robinson.' Then when work was over we would have such beautiful dances. Did you ever see a rainbow?"
"Yes, ever so many times. When I was quite a little boy I saw one, and I thought there was a pot of gold at each end, but mother says it is not so, and that the rain bow is only the sun shining through the rain drops."
"Why lind have all those lovely colors."
"Well, I'm ashamed to say, I was tired of ance all day long, instead of tagging away at rain drops, arying them to the clouds?

"What was it?" said Willie, breathlessly, as he raised himself on one elbow and peer-ed into her face. "Servant fairies of the king came and tor off my wings, and I fell down, down, Oh, it was horrible!" "I say, that was a mean old king. Why didn't you fight?" "Sun fairies are not like you; we don't fight we work or play," said Radia, scorn-fully. "But," she resumed, sadly, "without wings I was no longer a sun fairy, and at last I fell into a fast-running stream of water-Nigara river I knew it to be, for had often carried drops from it to the clouds, but now I must fhat on it. I shivered with the cold, and, worst of all, the sun and all hef fairies left me. Forthe first time in my life I was in the dark. I saw a lighted steamer go by, and I thought perhaps I could dimb up and get to the sun, but fom the tallest mast the sun was not to be seen. Then I heard a faaful noise. I could not even see the stars. I thought the image under the saw the sky again, and the rising sun. The water was now smooth, and around it was a wall of brick work. I knew where I was botween some shones on the shore." "No; it was in a big place and the water was smooth. Perhaps you can guess in minute. I was so happy to see the sun argin and the fairies dating once more." "No; it was in a big place and the water was smooth. Perhaps you can guess in minute.
