Two little squirrels in a cage
Upon their haunches sat,
And flicked their tails and spruce
their fur,
And talked of this and that.

"Oh, yes; and then, by way of joke,
We'll slip in empty shells;
And make them climb a hanging rope
And ring some little bells. "We will, we will," the other cried;
"That would be right and fair—
And make them climb forever up
The wheel that goes nowhere!" "Some day," said one, "we'll get out, And eatch two little boys, And keep them locked up in a cage, Away from all their joys!"

When grandma was a little girl she owned a box—her dearest treasure. In it she topk with dointy care the pleasure— A scrap of pale bluff calico with hittle sprigs of blue upon it. A bit of stiff silk ribbon, wide, from some one's old disearded bonnet, gingham pink, and silk, magenta, a bit of vevet, soft and green, that some dear maiden aunt had sent her.

To-day her great-grandchild, Lucile, bows sunny head o'er box of treasures,
"Doll rags," they call them, but to her they're almost chief among her pleasures—

BUT

OF THE ADVENTURE OF "LONE BOY"

At eleven years he met with an adventure which gave him another. He had learned to set snares for wild animals, and one day discovered the fresh path of a doe and two fawns, which were in the habit of on the river.

After several attempts Lone Boy fawns, which were in the habit of on the river.

After several attempts Lone Boy fawns, game a pair of bald eagles had already attacked and killed the fawn. He had intended, if he should take he had known where this pair of bald eagles had already attacked and killed the fawn. He had intended, if he should take a animal home for a pet. For some time he had known where this pair of eagles—at least, as he believed planned to watch the growth of their shoot them upon their first unwary of descent from their acrie. It was shoot them upon their first unwary of descent from the watch, and so secure the sagle in this way.

However, there was always the dearting of the watch, and so secure the prize the first unwary of the watch, and so secure the prize was always the dearting opportune moment.
