TO THE ELECTORS
—OF THE—
City of Fredericton.
Having been nominated for the office of Mayor of the City for the coming year, at a numerous late meeting of citizens held in the Court House, on the evening of the four month instant, I accept the nomination, and now beg to announce myself as a candidate.
In doing so, I beg to state that I am not the candidate of any class or party, and that if I am selected by my fellow citizens, to fill the position of chief magistrate, I will discharge the duties of the office fairly and impartially.
For nearly three years I have occupied a seat at the Council board and feel that the experience and knowledge I so acquired there will be of advantage to me if I have the honor of being elected Mayor.
Your obedient servant,
J. DOUGLAS HAZEN.

FAITH VERSUS PHYSIC.

Little Lat-lia Whitney, of Brooklyn, Stricken with a Virulent Fever, and Cured by a Faith Healer Operating from Boston.

(New York Star)

What seems to be a bona fide and successful restoration to health by means of the mind cure has been effected in Brooklyn. Mr. C. M Whitney is a well known lawyer, who has an office in the Equitable building, this city, and has a handsome residence at No. 565 Henry street, Brooklyn. He has several daughters, the youngest of whom is Estella, 11 years of age. She is a bright little miss, with black eyes and dark hair, and naturally the pet of the household.

Estella was taken sick a week ago Thursday. She grew steadily worse and on Friday the family physician called. He said the child had all the symptoms of remittent fever and that nothing could be done to hurry her convalescence: She must have excellent care, and a turn for the better could not be expected before ten days. Mrs. Whitney was not satisfied with this and called in two other physicians, both of whom said the same thing. They all agreed that it was a genuine case of remittent fever.

On Tuesday, after the child had been sick for five days, Mr. Whitney telegraphed to Julius A. Dresser, a celebrated Boston mind healer, to see what he could do. Mr Dresser telegraphed back that he would begin treating the child from Boston.

That night at 6 o'clock the fever left the child suddenly. She clamored for ice cream and coffee, which were given her, and she left her bed apparently well. The next day she was playing about the house, and has been well ever since. These facts are vouched for by Mr. and Mrs. Whitney and all the members of their household.

A reporter for the Star called at Mr. Whitney's house last evening and met the little girl who was so miraculously cured. He can testify to the fact that she has no fever now and that she seems in possession of good health and spirits. Mr Whitney told the reporter the facts as above narrated, and Mrs Whitney, who is a remarkably intelligent and vivacious lady, helped him in the tale.

"We have been away about five months," said Mrs Whitney, "and both going and coming we spent some time in Boston. Mr Dresser is a friend of our family, and both I and my daughter attended his faith cure classes while in Boston. When I came back to Brooklyn and mingled with friends do who not believe in the mind cure, I confess that I backslided somewhat. When my daughter was taken sick I naturally called a regular physician, not thinking of the mind cure then. Three doctors agreed that the illness was remittent fever, and said that nothing could be done, but let the fever take its course.

"On Thursday afternoon my daughter began to grow worse. In my excitement I forgot that my husband had telegraphed to Mr. Dresser. At about five o'clock the child became decidedly worse. All her aches and pains were intensified, and she screamed with anguish, and was wet with profuse perspiration. I thought the child was dying and was almost distracted. After an hour of this suffering the pain and sickness seemed to vanish at once. The child asked for ice cream, and ate it with a relish. She seemed to be well. The next day she got up as usual and has been about ever since, no trace of the fever remaining.

"I have since learned by correspondence with Mr. Dresser that he began treating the child Tuesday afternoon and continued the treatment for an hour. This must have been the time when she seemed to be the worst. The theory of mind healers is that a fever is a fear. They endeavour to chase away the fear, and that done, the patient is cured. Of course, I cannot say that my daughter got well directly from the results of the mind treatment, but I know this: she was very ill and now she is well. I sometimes think it was shown to me to restore my waning belief in the theory."

Mrs. Whitney talked very sensibly about the matter and does not seem like a woman to be possessed of a foolish fancy. Mr. Whitney has believed in the mind cure for some years, his brother and sister having been cured by it.

BABIES TETHERED LIKE GOATS.

An Interesting and Novel Sight in China.

One day when travelling through China on my bicycle tour around the world, says Thomas Stevens, I came upon a very novel and interesting sight. It is the first thing of the kind I ever saw or heard about. My overland journey led me through many out-of-the-way districts where the people are primitive and curious in many respects. In one of these obscure communities in the foothills of the Mao-Ling Mountains I saw about twenty Chinese infants tethered to stakes on a patch of greensward, like so many goats or pet lambs. The length of each baby's tether was about ten feet, and the bamboo stakes were set far enough apart so that the babies wouldn't get all tangled up. Each baby had a sort of girdle or kummerbund around its waist, and the end of the tether string was tied to the back of this. Some of the little Celestials were crawling about on all-fours; others were taking their first lessons in the feat of standing upright by steadying themselves against the stake they were tied to. What queer little Chinese mortals they all looked, to be sure, picketed out on the grassland like a lot of young calves whose mothers were away for the day! In this respect they did, indeed, resemble young calves, for I could see their mothers at work in a rice field a few hundred yards away. All the babies seemed quite contented with their treatment. I stood and looked at them for several minutes, from pure amusement at their unique position; but although they regarded me with wide eyed curiosity, I never heard a whimper from any of them. Nobody was paying the slightest attention to them, and from appearances I should conclude that they were most likely picketed out in this manner every fine day while their mother worked in the neighboring fields. Very probably these Chinese babies soon come to regard their daily outing at the stake with the same degree of satisfaction that very young America derives from his perambulator ride on sunny afternoons in the Park.

AFTER SIX YEARS.

Arrest of a Fall River Man Charged With Stealing $40,000—A Picture Taken by a Wandering Photographer Leads to His Apprehension.

OMAHA, Neb., Dec. 17.—Ernest K. Williamson, who, it is charged, six years ago robbed the firm of Albert Moran & Co. of Fall River, Mass., of $40,000 and fled to parts unknown, passed through here yesterday in charge of a detective. Williamson married the daughter of the senior member of the firm of Moran & Co. on June 14, 1881. The next day the young bride was killed in a runaway. That night Moran secured $40,000 in cash in a package, which was deposited in the safe, as it was after banking hours. Mr. Moran called at his son-in-law's house that night and mentioned the fact to him. During the night, it is charged, Williamson, who was connected with the bank, took the money and fled. The case was placed in the hands of detectives. About a year ago a wandering photographer, in passing through Homerville, Neb., took a picture of the only general store in town, with a group of ranchmen in front of it. Last Thanksgiving Day the photographer was arrested in Chicago, the negative of the picture being still in his possession. A detective recognized Williamson and went to Homerville and arrested him.

He Is Pleased on the Train.

Conductor Pierce, of the Rock Island suburban train service, tells a very interesting and certainly a true story about a passenger he had one recent morning.

"It was not much after daylight," said the popular conductor, "as we stopped for the Fort Wayne crossing in Englewood on my first morning run to the city.

Imagine my surprise, just as the train pulled out, to see a man come running from out one of the back yards next to the track clad only in his under-clothes and holding in his arms a bundle of clothing. He boarded the train, creating, as you might imagine, a good deal of a sensation among the young lady passengers; but he passed as quickly as he could into the smoking car and there finished his dressing.

You see, the man had failed to get awake as early as he had planned to do, and as he had to take my train into the city in order to catch a train out on another road, and as a very important business of his employer would have suffered had he not done so, he very wisely concluded to jump out of bed, grab his clothes up in his arms and make a run for it. Only a Chicago man would have done that, I guess."—Chicago Herald.

IT RECALLED HER TROUBLE.

Miss Annie Hunter Goes Insane in a Theatre.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—There was quite a scene at the Grand Opera House here to-night. At the end of the first act of the play L'Article 47, where Miss Clara Morris, as the creole girl Cora, is shot by her lover, Miss Annie Hunter, a member of the audience, suddenly became insane. It will be remembered that several years ago this young woman went to the Treasury Department where George Morgan, a son of Senator Morgan was at his desk, and calling the young man out in the street fired at him repeatedly with a revolver. The shots, however, inflicted only slight wounds and the young clerk refused to prosecute her. It is thought that the shooting scene she witnessed at the theater to-night recalled her trouble with young Morgan and affected her mind.

In Courtship Hours.

When on your face her lovely eyes
Are often fixed, when she appears
Attentive to your looks and sighs,
And to your words lends willing ears;
When she with laughter greets your jest
And says, 'I think you're horrid,' know
That you are still a welcome guest,
You need not yet make haste to go.

When on the clock her gaze she lends,
And wonders if pa's gone to bed,
And when you make a joke, pretends
She did not hear just what you said,
When she behind her lily hand
Begins to yawn, though he may grieve,
The man of sense will understand
The time has come for him to leave.

Mark Twain as a Lecturer.

The last time I heard him lecture, after having got rid of his hand, he stood before the house as still and silent as an unopened oyster. The audience was still as he. After a long pause, during which every one was painfully wondering what ailed him, he said "H'm?" and immediately relapsed into silence. A full minute went by during which he remained perfectly quiet with his eyes staring straight before him. Then he said "H'm!" again. At last some one started a little ripple of applause. Mark looked up radient with smiles. "Thank you," he said; "I was waiting for you to begin!"—New York Tribune.

Eloquence of Modulation.

Omaha Dame—"So you are named after your father! I suppose, though, your mamma has some pet name for you?"

Little Boy—"No; she calls me Will, same as she does papa."

"When she is in another room and calls I don't see how you can tell which one she means—you or your papa."

"Oh, that's easy enough. She always calls me kind o' coaxing, you know."

True to Their Natural Instincts.

"How wonderful is nature!" Yes, indeed. For instance, if you take a girl baby and a boy baby of the same age, dress them alike, grow them in a room by themselves, don't tell them their sexes, and when they grow to be about three years old if you fling a doll baby and a ball in to them the girl will take the baby and the boy the ball every time.

He Had Heard of Them.

"What a perfect night it is, George," she said, as they strolled slowly along, "and the air is so sweet and delicious one can almost fancy that it is laden with all the perfume of Arabia!"

"Yes, dear," assented George, who was in a condition to assent to anything, "it must be such a night as they have in Arabia. I've often heard of the Arabian nights."
