I was not sure that I might take the grocer into my confidence; so I thought I might work the oracle by means of the ring. I wanted the servant of the murdered old lady to see this ring. Perhaps she might recognize it.

I brought her up immediately to the porter-house. When the ring was shown to her she at once identified it as having belonged to her late mistress.

It now seemed highly probable that Bob Lester was one of the gang who had robbed and murdered the old lady.

The price the keeper of the porter-house was instructed to sak for the ring was eight dellars. I wanted to negotiate with the owner, if possible; so I made an offer of seven dollars, and was to call in the evening for an answer.

Next morning, on being taken before the magistrate, they were both charged with the vobbery and murder, and remanded to a week. I had not previously been able to according the lodgings of the man fired; but they were recognized in court by beveral parties, and their whereabouts easily discovered.

Upon searching the lodgings of the man first arrested, a complete set of housebreaking implements was found, and the way I fell is with him was rather singular.

I was standing one Sunday evening at the bar of a certain porter-house near the Park, taking a quiet glass of ale, and 'looking on,' when a buson little maid-servant came in for her supper beer, with a jug in one hand and a deer-key in the other.
