THE RIOT IN COUNTY CLARE

The following is the version of the Clare riots which took place a week from Thursday last, as given by the correspondents who view the question from the Landlords standpoint. The statements are no doubt, in some cases monstrous exaggerations:

There was a serious riot at Bodyke, County Clare, on Thursday. Accounts from Ennis state that Lieut. John O'Callaghan accompanied by 80 police and the bailiff, went to the village of Bodyke to serve writs on some of Colonel O'Callaghan's tenants. The people were gathered together by the ringing of the church bells and the blowing of horns. They assembled in thousands in the village and on the surrounding heights and attempted to impede the progress of the police force. The first collision took place at the entrance of the town. Six mounted policemen were ordered to charge the crowd which barred ingress to the village. In this charge one man was seriously injured. From the threatening attitude of the people it was deemed advisable to send for reinforcements, and a mounted trooper was despatched to Scariff for soldiers. The force quartered there consisted of 40 men of the 64th Foot were soon on the scene. In the meantime the bailiff and Colonel O'Callaghan went to the first house to be served; but a regular fusillade was opened on the party from the heights. The Rev. Mr. Murphy, in running up the hill to implore the people to desist, had a narrow escape from being shot, a rifle bullet perforating his coat. Meanwhile the firing was continued, and the rioters, having been read, the fire was returned by the police, who charged the people, and, after a hot pursuit of half-a-mile, captured 16 men. These, however, had managed to get rid of their guns. They were brought back handcuffed, and marched in the midst of the police from house to house as the writs were served. This had the desired effect, and no further obstruction was given to the police till they were returning home to Ennis. About ten o'clock, at Fort Anbeg, within two miles of Tulla, the police got off the cars to walk up a steep hill. At the turn of the road an armed party was lying in wait, and immediately opened fire on the police from the adjoining wood. No less than forty shots were counted in regular file firing order, the bullets whizzing over the heads of the police, fortunately doing no injury. The police briskly returned the fire, but with what effect is not known. About a quarter of a mile further on they were again fired on by another armed party from behind some hedges, and one of the horses in the car, on which sat County Inspector Smith, was shot dead. The police made a search through the fields, and three men were arrested, but they had no arms. The tenant of Fort Anberg was one of the party, and his son and a servant. The others arrested were brought up at the petty sessions and remanded.

The following is a detailed account of the affray: It appears that eighty policemen proceeded to Bodyke for the purpose of assisting in the eviction of a tenant. Bodyke is a small village situated mid-way between Scariff and Tulla, where some military are at present garrisoned. The police, while proceeding in small parties to the place of assembly, were attacked in detail by the people. Ambulance waggon conveyed the police from Ennis. They were under the command of the County Inspector. On the way from Ennis a hive of bees was let loose, and the stings of the insects caused two of the horses to become unmanageable. One maddened beast dashed himself against the wall and was killed. Mounted orderlies were despatched to Tulla for the assistance of the military, while, in the meantime, the police, in united force, proceeded to the house where the eviction was to take place. It was situated on a hill, and, as they ascended near it, the police were attacked by an armed band of desperadoes, who, from the covert of the fences at each side of the road, poured a galling fire into the ranks of the Constabulary. The latter were immediately deployed in skirmishing order and returned the fire with effect, killing one man and wounding several others. The police succeeded in reaching the house, which was filled with armed men. They broke in the front door and took the garrison by surprise. The rioters rushed through the back door, but several were arrested. Some who had attacked the Constabulary from behind the fences were also taken, and, in all, some thirty prisoners were captured. The house was taken possession of and the family inhabiting it were cleared out. While returning with their prisoners the police were attacked and fired upon on the second time, one of their horses being shot dead. Beyond this no serious casualty occurred. The police behaved well. The mounted men who were despatched for the military had also to run a severe gauntlet, a determined effort being made to prevent them from reaching Tulla. They, however, reached the town through all the obstacles. The police succeeded in conveying their prisoners to gaol.

Later reports about this affray state that a farmer named Maloney had died from the effects of a blow from the butt end of a gun.

On Thursday a force of over 1,000 soldiers and police had to protect a bailiff who attempted to serve 60 processes for rent on the estate of Capt. Maxwell Fox, near Tullamore. A large crowd assembled, and stones were thrown at the police. In each case the doors were removed from the houses and the entrances were blocked up with stones, but these were removed and the processes were posted in conspicuous parts of the tenements.

One hundred police and two mounted orderlies of the 87th left Kilkenny, for Connelton to make seizures for rent. The cars, even those of private gentlemen, were forcibly seized for the conveyance of the military, and the police were accommodated with ambulance waggons. Notwithstanding the threatened fine of £20, several car owners placed their horses out of reach, and consequently some of the military had to walk 15 miles to the scene of action.

All officers on leave of absence, whose regiments are now quartered in Ireland, have been ordered to return at once. It is expected that further arrests will be made of members of the Executive Committee of the Land League.

“NOT A FIXED QUANTITY.” (Mail.)

Day by day, the discussion on the question of free trade goes on in England. Every paper contains letters, articles and reports of meetings in which the one-sided free trade theories are taken to task and a process of retaliation demanded. It is evident that the position of the free trade theory has changed. For many years it was a gospel, and he who denied it was cast out into exterior darkness, so to speak; he was ostracised among the intellectual portion of the trades and derided by the professors. But gradually it came to be only an opinion; and at last it seems as if it were an opinion on the defensive. Clearly enough, if the French treaty turns out to be unfavourable, the public feeling in England will make the position of ultra free traders desperate. In our last issue we gave Mr. Gladstone's views on the subject of foreign labour, as represented by foreign products, in the English market. We produce this morning an extract from the Daily Telegraph giving warning to France about the possible results of a refusal to do justice to England's demand for free trade relations. It is as follows, and we make no apology for the length of the extract:

“Our tariff is not a fixed quantity, absolutely unalterable, as the laws of the Medes or Persians; it is simply a convenient engine for raising revenue and our own ideas of expediency are the sole guides to which we shall listen in either remitting or imposing duties. Last year Mr. Gladstone took pains to remit half the remaining duty on French wine, if he found expedient, but he did not exercise that power; and two years previously Sir Stafford Northcote added something to the duty on tobacco with hardly a dissenting voice. If Mr. Gladstone had done this, free by the terms of the Rousier Cobden treaty—which, our French friends must never forget, bound us well as them—were to propose to double or treble the duty on French wine in order to secure a futicum for an advantageous treaty with Spain, he would probably meet with as little opposition as Sir Stafford Northcote encountered. If, further, he were, in order to keep up the average proportionate yield from indirect taxation, to advise the remission of the duty on refined sugar, which was only repealed a few years since—for there is nothing sacred about sugar—we have not the slightest doubt that English sentiment would support him. These are merely hypotheses; but, in the prevailing ignorance abroad as to opinion in this country, it is advisable to refer even to contingencies which might some day develop into facts. The result of the matter is simply this: that the English people, witnessing an almost general conspiracy abroad to starve their industry by prohibitory tariffs, are beginning to discuss with ominous earnestness ideas of retaliation, with a view to safeguard their own interests, and that the new fiscal policy of the French may be the turning-point of their future action. We may regret that the issue has been raised, but, as the Preston election shows, it is a thing before the great popular constituencies in a way to demand notice, and the most careful treatment from statesmen and politicians. The French may justly think retaliation unlikely; but they would do well not to treat it as impossible.”

We do not need to add much by the way of comment on this language. It is the language of a paper with a daily circulation of a quarter of a million, and which may be said to be read daily by millions. When we find its views endorsed by Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, members of Parliament, and hosts of correspondents, we do well to give heed to them. The people of Canada will do well to give heed to them, too. We suffered more from the United States than England has suffered from France; we have applied the remedy, and England appears to be about applying it, too.
