our progress will be much more rapid than in the parent country with the system we now possess. The changes which the Convention ad-vocates propose are tantamount to a com-plete Revolution, and are such as the peo-ple themselves have never yet fully consid-dered. Vote by ballot-universal suffrage —an elective Legislative Council—an elec-tive Governor, and the elective principle carried out in all appointments to office, &c., &c., are but a part of the changes pro-proposed. Many of these measures will be carried by the people themselves in a legitimate way at the polls, after they have been fully discussed, as certainly as the sun shines, and the proposers of the Con-vention know this too. But this is not what the Convention-men want. In a few months a new election must take place, when the people can pledge their represen-tatives to carry any change that they de-sire. If this is done in the natural course, the advocates for a Cenvention know that the free expression of public opinion will never entruct them with the paternity of a constitution.
