(Concluded.) ' Jane and I were born in Hertford shire, within a short distance of each other. I knew her from a child. She was better off then, I worse than we father's bankruptcy, I by my moby Mrs. Barton's wealthy marriage. She was about nineteen, I twentyfour, when I left the country for London. That she loved me with all the fervor of a trusting woman I well knew; and I had, too, for some time known that she must be either honor ably wooed or not at all. That with me, was out of the question, and, as ! told you, I came about that time to London. You can, I dare say, imagine the rest. We were-I and my friends, pose of our wares, and at the same sime pressed for money. I met Jane Eccles by accident. Genteel, of graceful address and winning manners. she was just fitted for our purpose. J feigned re-awakened love, proffered narriage, and a home across the Atlantic, as soon as certain trifling but troublesome affairs which momentarily harassed me were arranged. She believed me. I got her to change a considerable number of notes under various pretexts, but that they were fully purged the old Draco code that forged she had not and could not now a faint vestige only of the old have the remotest suspicion. You know the catastrophe. After her apprehension I visited this prison as her brother, and buoyed her up to the her brother, and buoyed her up to the last with illusions of certain pardon SOUR STOMACH and release, whatever the verdict through the influence of my wealthy father-in law, of our immediate union from dyspepsia and sour stomach for tor's powerful grasp. He threw himself on the rude pallet, and we silently withdrew. A paper embodying Justin Arnold's declaration was forwarded to the secretary of state, and duly acknowledged, accompanied by an official expression of mild regret that it had not been made in time to save the life of Jane Eccles. No further notice was taken of the matter, and the record of the young woman's judical sacrifice still doubtless encumbers the archieves of the Home Office, forming, with numerous others of like character, the dark, sanguine background upon barbarism remains, stands out in bright relief and changeless lustre.

The Writ of Habeas Corpus

In the month of February of the year following that which witnessed the successful establishment of Sir Harry Compton's infant son to his magnificent patrimony, Mr. Sam nal Ferret was traveling post with all the speed he could command towards Lancashire, in compliance with a summens from Lady Compton, requesting, in urgent terms, his immediate presence at the castle. It was grand ointment I obtained relief, and wild and bitter weather, and the roads were in many pleaces rendered dangerous, and almost impassable, by the drifting snow. Mr. Ferret, however, pressed onwards with his habitual

Two days before, as Lady Compton and her sister, who had been paving a visit to Mrs. Arlington at the Grange, were returning home towards nine o'clock in the evening, they observed, as the carriage turned a sharp angle of the road leading through Compton Park, a considerable number of lighted lanterns borne hurriedly to and fro in various directions, by persons apparently in eager but bewildered pursuit of some missing object. The carriage was stopped, and in answer to the servant's inquiries, it was replied that Major Brandon's crazy niece had escaped from her uncle's house; and although traced by the snowtracks as far as the entrance to the park, had not yet been recovered. Mrs. Brandon had offered a reward of and reconduct her home; hence the not pursuit of the fugitive, who, it was now supposed, must be concealed in the shrubberies. The horses were urged rapidly forward: and ere more than a minute had elapsed, the carriage drew up within a few yards of the hunted girl and her captors. The instant it stopped frenzied effort from the rude grasp in which she was held by an athletic which the achievements of the great ed mercy and protection. ### Eczema's Tortures

CHASE'S OINTMENT. Mrs. Link, 12 Walker St., Halifax, N. S., writes: "After three years of miserable torture and sleepless nights with terrible eczema, and after trying over a dozen remedios without obtaining anything but slight temporary relief, have been perfectly and entirely oured by Dr. Chase's Cintment. After the third or fearth's few boxes were sufficient to make a thorough cure. It is six months since I was freed of this wretched skin disease, and as there has been no return of the trouble I consider the cure a permanent one.' Such cures are not brought about by energy and perseverance; and, spite of all elemental and postboy opposition, succeeded in accomplishing his journey in much less time than, under the circumstances, could have been reasonably expected. But swiftly as,
