as that of the men of the navy, and the services they were of a value that may have been estimated. Without it the war would not have been won. And with men of the merchant marine rightly included the men of the ing craft. These, besides pursuing their vocations in enemy waters, constituted the majority of the crews of the fleet of "drift" that in the Mediterranean as well as in British waters, spent their looking for mines that had been placed by the enemy where they did most harm. The service was generous to a degree hardly headed by those not engaged in many boats and their crews counted in the great aid that shipping industry rendered, not Great Britain alone, but to all the Allied and associated powers. It was met that the highest appreciation of what the men of the navy did to bring about a right conclusion to the war. In regard to them, as in regard to their brethren of the fighting ships, England expected that every man would do duty, and the expectation was the high tradition of the British service has been raised.

THE CALL OF COUNTRY.

Public Opinion Crystallizing. Sir Robert Bond, the Man.

country to-day is in an ap- pensive state politically. It is held that an election will be held in spring. There are rumours of a crisis, but nothing definite is as yet. The lessons of the last few years have shown us the way for a change of Govern- ment and the cry of many of our to-day is for some man to take the reins and command and the esteem of the electorate.

Many of the devotees of the Liberal Party are calling on Sir Bond to again assume leader- ship as a measure it is up to the whether he accepts the offer.

These present non-partisan voters are undoubtedly tired of loud-mouthed sayings and empty phrases, and further, they are watching the present events with curious and open minds. But not alone. The men who contemplate entering the political arena again are likewise watching the trend of the times and opinions.

Now our next election will be much different from those of the past. Our men have been to other countries and have become imbued with different ideas, and their opinions gained in their travels abroad have been im- pressed on those with whom they came in contact. The war has brought clear to many the different problems facing us. Our revenues and expenditures are worthy of our most serious attention.

Questions raising out of such will need serious consideration. A party leader will need to be a strong man to bring order out of the present con- fusion, and such a leader must have outlined a strong constructive policy, and above everything, he must be a patriot.

The question presented is. Where can we find such a man? The voters are looking, they are comparing present administrations with earlier ones and are taking full stock of the con- trast presented.

It is not sufficient for men to make a contrast, but they must also allow their judgments to be formed by same.

These contrasts do favor a return of Sir Robert Bond to the head of affairs. Are we going to have him or not? Are we going to allow our- selves to drift with the tide and see others plunging our country further and further into unnecessary debt?

Are we indifferent to our country's fate, and do we want to lose our name as Britain's Oldest Colony and be- come merged into a part of the Do- minion of Canada?

These questions are confronting us to-day; their answer depends upon what kind of men we will send to Parliament at our next election. We have seen the works of the different public leaders for the last ten years. We have noted the differences which reflect credit and honour upon the ad- ministration of Sir R. Bond, and it is now up to the electorate to make a fuller advertisement of their views and induce our old Liberal Leader, if possible, to again take the helm and lead us once more in the path of clean politics and colonial progressiveness.

"What are the whistles blowin' for?" the little gunner cried, "To line us up, to line us up," he jolly Tar replied.

"What makes you look so bright, so bright?" the little gunner cried, "I'm lovin' what I'm goin' to watch," the jolly Tar replied.

"for we've waited many years for to celebrate the day, When Heinele and his sneakin' sub- marines would come our way, Well, they're comin', sonny, comin', and they don't look none too

For we're takin' them to England in the mornin'!"

"What's that that's hoverin' overed," the little gunner cried, "Why, that's a British airplane," the jolly Tar replied.

"What's that they're throwin' over- board?" the little gunner cried, "Oh, that's a bloomin' paravane," the jolly Tar replied.

"Though their guns are fore and aft and now the lightest fight is done, This 'ere a min' field we're in, and though the war is won, We don't take any chances when we're dealin' with a 'Un— But we're takin' them to England in the mornin'!"

"What makes them look so black, so black?" the little gunner cried, "They're dreadin' what they've got to face," the jolly Tar replied.

"Why don't we cheer? Why don't we cheer?" the little gunner cried, "Oh, we've British gentlemen," the jolly Tar replied.

"Though shootin' us in open boats was one of Heinele's joys, And soon as us is 'itchin' for to 'urt those yellow boys, Still, it ain't no time for boastin', and ain't no time for noise— But we'll raise the roof of England in the mornin'!"

Tired in the Mornings

IT is only natural to be tired at night. And sleep—Nature's sweet restorer—usually comes with soothing rest to him who is naturally tired out after the work of the day.

But to be tired in the mornings is an unfortunate condition, since it tells of sleepless nights, and of nerves that refuse to rest.

Unless the nerve force, wasted in the process of living and by the corroding worries and anxieties of the day, is replenished by nightly rest and sleep, there must sooner or later come a day of reckon- ing—a day of bankruptcy—for the human machine cannot operate without nerve force.

You may not have realized just what was the cause of your wretched feelings in the mornings, of the headaches and dig- estive troubles, of the restlessness and sleeplessness.

But all the time Nature has been using her danger signals to warn you that nerve force is being exhausted more rapidly than it is being replaced.

Your digestive system fails to supply to the starved nerve the nourishment required, so it is necessary to seek aid in condensed and easily assimilated foods such as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

There is no lack of evidence to prove the restorative influence of this food cure. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is so universally known and used that few people are ignorant of its merits, but this knowledge cannot help you unless you obtain the Nerve Food and use it regularly.

It is not a narcotic or opiate. It will not produce sleep. But when you have used it for a few days you will find the nerves so strengthened that you will be able to enjoy natural, restful sleep. You will not be so easily irritated and annoyed, and will obtain relief from headache and other pains and aches consequent on the ex- hausted condition of the nerves.

Naturally it takes a little time and patience to rebuild a run-down nervous system, but so long as you can see little improvements you will be happy to follow out this treatment until you are thoroughly restored.

DR. CHASE'S MEDICINES are sold by all Druggists and Dealers in St. John's and in the Outports. Wholesale quotations from GERALD S. DOYLE, Sole Agent, Water Street, St. John's.
