Market Notes.

Codfish—With but few transactions last week prices stood at $14 @ $14.50 for No. 1 Shore and $9.50 to $10 for Labrador Soft Cure.

Cod Oil—This article is at a trade standstill, the nominal price being $120 per ton, with no prospect of any advance. Refined continues dull at $2.25 per gallon.

Herring—With prices gone to the dogs in the New York Market, a corresponding drop has taken place locally, $16.50 being the highest price for Scotch pack, with sales slow. Spits, which are now in demand for West India requirements are selling at $7 to $7.50 according to quality.

Provisions—Standard Flour is being quoted at from $14 to $14.50, and a few barrels of "all white" are being offered at prices upon application. Judging by the recent advance in Chicago we are likely to have dearer Pork than ever the coming season. Local prices are unchanged and trade in this commodity holds dull. Beef values go from $46.50 to $47.50, according to grade. Sugar is now released from all restrictions, as will be seen by referring to the official notice elsewhere in our columns. White is selling at $12.70 per hundred pounds, but there are prospects of a decline in the price of subsequent importations. Because of Food Control regulations, Molasses keeps up to $1.00 per gallon, whole sale, though it is quite possible that with the arrival of new shipments from Barbados, this figure will be considerably reduced. The quantity now held in stock here is small and the quality of it is decidedly not superior.

MADE BY SCOTT & BOWNE
MARKERS OF SCOTT'S EMULSION

At St. Thomas's.

St. Thomas's Church was filled on Sunday night, when Rev. Dr. Jones spoke especially to the sailors and soldiers, taking his text from the Book of Ecclesiastes. "There is no discharge in this war." The preacher first of all stated that his subject had been suggested by a soldier's mother and that he wished to speak pointedly to the sailors and soldiers. He then spoke of the many soldiers who died in France, and had their resting place marked by the wooden crosses. These wooden crosses suggest three things, by their pointing upwards, downwards, and outwards. These suggestions give us certain thoughts, which, if acted upon, mould the character. The cross pointing upward speaks of duty, which is the highest expression of human character, and which brings its own reward. Adopting a personal note, he continued, telling the young men that they were often told that their discharge from the army meant that their duty was done, but he declared that the spiritual warfare was not over, and that the duties of citizenship were as strenuous as those of soldiering. As far as the reward was concerned, he advised them to avoid all Government jobs, as the later often tended to destroy the independence of the men, in voting on possibly vital questions of the country's welfare. He further warned them not to be pessimists or revolutionists, as the life of Jesus, in His three years of preaching, during which time he spoke not a word against the Roman power, was a living example of the force of personal social service. He told them that money, legislation and organization were only subsidiary things, and that the real moralising force was personal service of the individual man, and emphasized the need of high ideals, and loyalty to the same, asserting that from such would spring a regenerated people. Taking the lesson from the base of the cross as pointing downwards, he declared that manhood was at its best on the battlefield, as character was shown among the soldiers. He quoted the words of Mr. Moody, "character is what a man is in the dark." To develop this character two axioms were to be kept in view, "aim high," and "fight hard." Men were to live up to the high standard set, and to stand and fight together. They were to battle against three evils: (1) drunkenness, and to make the prohibition law more effective, (2) gambling, and to counteract the evil and demoralizing influences of this habit, (3) impurity. In the last named he made a plea for ignorance and hatred of sin, and gave the words of Sir Gallahad: "My strength is as the strength of ten, because my heart is pure." He pleaded for ignorance and hatred of evil, and also for loyalty to truth, that the passions of evil might be kept down, and character strengthened. The cross pointing upward betokened the need of God. God was not optional. He was the inspiration of duty, and the foundation of morality. Finally, the preacher commended them to God, declaring that it was no little thing to become a Christian, but that it required heroism to fight against the foes of righteousness. "We have no time to sport away the hours," quoted the preacher, and as a shining example, worthy of following, he instanced General Gordon, the noble Christian and soldier, who so lived and died that men spoke of him as one who gave "his heart to God."

* Anti-Social Strikes.

The cables informed the world that the strike of port workers at Buenos Aires had prevented 600,000 tons of cargo from entering the port, and had prevented the export of 100,000 tons of meat from that port. That is a sorry sequel to Argentina's advance of $200,000,000 by the Allies to be used in payment for foodstuffs and raw materials. To be sure, the strike makes a better market for others who have such goods for sale, but nobody except strikers would create such conditions. Their selfish benefit is not so clear as the injury to others, both in Argentina and in the hungry countries. Such incidents are too common, and their reaction upon the strikers is inevitable.

In Seattle the strikers lost $3,500,000 in wages, and damaged trade unionism beyond estimate by the disclosure of the extent to which some laborers are willing to go when they are receiving not only the highest wages ever known, but so high that they prejudice other laborers and disturb the nation's scale of prevailing wages. In Butte, too, the conditions were revolutionary, although wages and prices in the copper industry are on a sliding scale agreed to be fair when prices were rising, but open to forcible resistance when prices are falling. What can capital do more to persuade labor that it is receiving a fair deal and has a stake in the industry? Labor cannot have the feelings of a partner, and therefore cannot be qualified for partnership, unless it is willing to share the fat with the lean.

Reason should be met with reason, but force can be met only with force. Collective bargaining should be allowed, but not unlawful duress. Human considerations should be favored, but there should be no parleying with those who create disorders, or who combine less for the betterment of their own conditions than to prevent others from accepting what they decline. Workers who have claims over strikers raise a presumption of bad faith in denouncing as unfair wages that others are willing to take. Those who take low wages need them more than those who decline them. Wages are increased production, and production is for the interest of everybody. Strikers decrease production, and this is against the interest of everybody including the strikers. The solidarity of the whole mass is superior to the solidarity of the class. Class patriotism is anti-social. Mass patriotism is the patriotism of country, the true patriotism. Class solidarity is mercenary to a degree surpassing humane qualities, which sometimes are manifested in the manner of revolutionary and the assassin. This is a unionism which is beneficent to the necessity of drawing distinctions.—Y. Times

Sir,—I beg to forward you with copies of correspondence to me by Major Sullivan, Officer Commanding, Newfoundland Forestry, having reference to the performed by the Foresters during their stay in Scotland. These look in very flattering terms of work performed by our Men, and another instance of the appreciation of Newfoundland's efforts during war.

publication of those letters in paper, I feel sure, will be appreciated by the people of this Country, particularly the Officers and Men of Newfoundland Forestry Corps.—

Yours faithfully,
J. R. BENNETT,

Major Sullivan,
that you are beginning to wind up that I want to express to you on behalf of the Scots Branch of Timber Supply Department, our very thanks for the assistance we received from yourself, your men and your men, and from Mr. Kenmore, who has been such a good friend to the enterprise. You have had two of the most difficult of the Department's work in hand. The first has been finished to complete success. We greatly regret and I know you regret that second should be left uncompleted, but since the end of the war was uncertain date, we have always been that this risk had to be run in larger operations.
