CHAPTER II.

"How could you be so mad?" he said at last; and the words seemed a strange mode of expressing his thanks for the life he owed her.

Iris lifted her eyes, and let them fall upon him in silence, and the color came welling back into his bronzed cheeks.

"I beg your pardon," he said; "but I know I owe you my life. I'm very grateful. But—but it was madness!"

"Was it?" she said, in her low, sweet, musical voice. "It was madness not to have come to you sooner, but—I didn't think of it till you fell."

"You should not have come at all," he said, almost sternly. "It was dangerous, horribly, wickedly dangerous! If your horse had stumbled or you had fallen—" he stopped, and a slight shudder ran through him. "Besides, I should have got to the gate—No," he broke off. "I should not! I know I should not? You have saved my life! But when I think of the risk you ran, I wish—I do wish most heartily—that you had been miles away."

She sat motionless, looking down at him contemplatively.

No one, not even her father, had ever spoken so firmly, so masterfully, as this stranger had done.

As she looked down at him she saw two or three drops of blood run down his wrist and fall to the ground.

A little spasm of pain passed her lips; all women hate the sight of blood.

"Are you hurt?" she said.

"Hurt? No." Then his eyes followed hers; and he put his hand behind him.

"At least, if I am I don't feel it. I suppose our friend must have struck me when he came dancing over me. But it is nothing, anyway. But you?"

She shook her head.

"Your habit is torn," he said suddenly, as his eyes roamed over her anxiously. "You are sure he did not touch you?"

"Quite," said Iris. "No, I am not hurt in the least. But you—I am afraid!"

"No, no," he replied quickly. "The worst harm I have got is an intolerable thirst!" and he laughed.

"There is a brook in the hollow there," she said. "I will show you."

She walked down the slope, and the young fellow walked by her side, brushing the dust from his clothes with his manured hand.

Every now and then during their short journey he glanced up at the pale face with a vague wonder at its beauty and its sweet calmness.

Most girls would have been in a state of palpitating "gush," half laughing, half crying; where this beautiful creature, who had descended, as it were, from heaven, on her black horse, was as calm and serene and self-pos-

"CHRISTIANIZE THE CHURCH" SAYS PRESBYTERIAN CLEGG MEN.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 22.—(Associated Press)—One of the greatest difficulties confronting the church lies in the fact that there are 175 varieties of churches in America. Dr. Baxter P. Fullerton, of St. Louis, told the World's Alliance of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches here today. Dr. Fullerton is secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions and was telling of the difficulties of home mission work in the United States. Denominationalism, he said, was one of the most serious of these. Each of the 175 kinds of church was endeavoring to promote its own work, both in the city and the country, among native and immigrant alike and consequently, there was not only overlapping but also overlooking, since there had been no co-operation in the location and development of these various local churches. Continuing he said that the greatest problem before the agencies of the Christian Church is to "Christianize the church itself." He declared that there are communities in America where four or five different denominations are at work, each church receiving home mission aid, when one or two churches could be both self-sustaining and self-respecting. Efforts had been made, he said, to change this "shameful situation" but up to the present it existed "to the embarrassment of the work" and "to the scorn of the ungodly." An attempt had been made to unite denominations having similar doctrine and government into one larger unit, and in this way unite the local churches into one for better service for the community but Dr. Fullerton said that extreme denominationalism prevents any very large application of this principle and strong peoples remain apart because of some unimportant, or subsidiary question, on which the salvation of no soul or community depends.

"It is apparent, therefore," he went on, "that this larger union will never be accomplished until the kingdom of God bulks larger in the minds of people than the church, until the salvation and service of mankind becomes a greater concern than the establishment of a specific church. This duplication of churches is not only harmful to the cause but is also a useless waste of both money and men."

Dr. Fullerton said it was heart-rending to know that this condition of things was being considered serious by churches and missionary agencies and pointed out that the organization of a Home Missions Council and Council of Women for Home Missions 14 years ago, had become an outstanding evidence of a spirit of co-operation prevailing in the churches. He pointed to the condition in Utah as an illustration of what had been accomplished by the Home Missions Council and said that to-day there were no communists in that state where two or more Gentile churches were at work except in the cities of Salt Lake and Ogden. Similar organizations for interdenominational home mission work had been made in Colorado, Montana, Porto Rico, Cuba, Alaska and Santa Domingo. Despite the hindrance of denominationalism, Dr. Fullerton reported that the spirit of evangelism prevailing in America was one of the most hopeful signs of the times. Never in the course of a year had there been such an interest in bringing men into the church, he said. He recounted the difficulties in attempting to Christianize and Americanize the polyglot peoples of the cities, as well as of the state, to solve the problems of malnutrition and housing. He said that, according to best information, there were now 18,500 men and women engaged in some form of missionary work in this country and more than $26,000,000 invested in the business of making and keeping America Christian for the redemption of mankind and the friendly service of the world.

Crime Wave
in New York.

People held up by handits and robbed—1,500 more policemen wanted to handle traffic and enforce prohibition.

New York, Sept. 27.—The cry of "crime wave" was raised to-day following yesterday's carnival for robberies.

In the Grand Central Station, in a crowded spot as can be found in the city, three handits, armed with lead pipes and revolvers, fell upon a cashier of the N. Y. N.H. and Hartford R. R. and tried to snatch a handbag containing thousands of dollars.

A pistol attack was made upon M. Jmacahacok, a theatre manager, at Second Avenue and 74th St., while he was carrying $1,200 to bank. Jmacahacok dropped his money box at the first shot, which grazed his cheek, and his assailant scooping up $400, escaped in an automobile.

Dermott Perdisant and his bride were held up by four men at the bride's home on Ninth Avenue.

Four armed men held up Ralph De Mura, a taxicab driver, at Broadway and 8th street, took $13.65, precluded the possibility of pursuit by slashing his tires, and escaped.

Police Commissioner Earlight has asked Board of Estimate for an additional $4,000,000.

He asserted that about 1,600 more men were needed—but explained that many of them were required to handle traffic and enforce Prohibition.

WINDING THE CLOCK.
When I was but a little Lad, my old Grandfather said
That none should wind the clock but he and so, at time for bed
He'd fumble for the curious key, kept hid upon the shelf
And aside that little task entirely for himself.

In time Grandfather passed away, and so that duty fell
Unto my Father who performed the weekly custom well.
He held that clocks were not to be by careless person wound
And he alone should turn the key or move the hands around.

I envied him that little task, and wished that I might be
The one to be entrusted with the turning of the key.
But year by year the clock was hid
Until the day the angels came and smoothed his silver hair.

To-day the task is mine to do, like those who've gone before
I am a solemn guardian of that round and lassy door
And until at my chamber door God's messenger shall knock
To no alone shall be reserved the right to wind the clock.

SWEET, PURE MILK—always on hand when you want it!

If you have never used Libby's Evaporated Milk, you will be amazed to find how good, how convenient and economical it is. Many women who first tried it in some emergency now use it always—they find it gives such satisfactory results.

There's no waiting for the milkman—you can always keep several cans on the shelf and in summer there's no bothering with ice, and in winter the milk wagon can get stuck in a heavy drift of snow as often as it wants to!

And there's less waste—a can of Libby's Evaporated Milk will keep indefinitely before being opened—and after you have opened a can you can use just what you need; the rest, put in a cool place, will keep several days.

Libby's Milk comes from the finest dairying section of America and is processed in our own sanitary condensaries—it is not the "distributed" product of an unknown and nameless plant.

Order a tin from your grocer to-day.

LIBBY'S TASTELESS

My heart is sore and heavy now; I'm feeling far from gay; for I am thinking of the cow that I ran down to-day. Ah, black and bitter in my mood and small relief I find in saying that the cow was stewed, or had a feeble mind. The man who has a worth at least five hundred bones. My car is to the junkyard gone, and it no more will zip along the highway was rubbering around, as drivers often do; I did not gaze upon the ground, or keep the curves in view. My thoughts from this gray world of men after had roved along, in fancy I was treading then the shining peaks of sons. The cow appeared upon the pike, ahead, a rod or perch, and oh the impact then was like the falling of a church. The undertakers found it hard through all the wreck to plow and harder yet to tell the hard from motor car or cow. The cow is planted in the earth, beneath a cairn of stones; the owner tells me she was worth at least five hundred bones. My car is to the junkyard gone, and it no more will zip along the highway

In the dawn—it's made its final trip. And I sit here and nurse my wounds, in misery intense, and cry, "Odsteh!" and likewise "Zounds!" and wish I had some sense.

Healthy Mother Merry Children Happy Home

To maintain a happy home the housewife must keep in good health. Her duties are many and various, and it seems as if every other member of the family depended very much on her. "Where is my hat?" cries the boy. "What did you do with my coat?" asks the daughter. "I can't find any handkerchiefs," yells the husband. The housewife is usually the advisor and general manager of the family.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helps women to maintain a happy home by keeping them in good health.

Toronto, Ont.—"I suffered with irregular menstruation, was weak and run down, could not eat, and had headaches. The worst symptoms were dragging down pains so bad I sometimes thought I would go crazy and I seemed to be smothering. I found one of your booklets and felt inclined to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I received the best results from it and now I keep house and go out to work and am like a new woman. I have recommended your Vegetable Compound to my friends and if these facts will help some poor woman use them as you please."—Mrs. W. PEASEY, 387 King St., Toronto.

Owen Sound, Ont.—"I suffered for ten years with female organic trouble, neuralgia and indigestion, and was weak and had such bad pains I could hardly walk or stand up at times. The last doctor I had told me he never expected me to be on my feet again or able to do a day's work. One day one of your little booklets was left at my door and my husband said I should try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I thank God I did, for it relieved me, and I am now well and strong. I think there is no remedy like the Vegetable Compound for anyone who has my troubles, and have recommended it to my neighbors."—Mrs. HENRY A. MITCHELL, 1767 7th Ave. East, Owen Sound, Ont.
