CHAPTER XXXVII.

DARRADD HAYES AND DICK MATTOCKS IN SECRET CONFERENCE, AS THEN SUPPOSE.
Philip's blood absolutely boiled in his veins as he gazed at the ruffian, and reflected that the pure and genite Annabel had been given up to him, and it required all the power of restraint in his nature to prevent him from rushing upon him. He was able to resist the impulse only by further reflecting that she was now virtually delivered from him; that never again should he go near her to insult or terrify her; and that ere perchance an hour had gone he would call him to a heavy reckoning for all the past. With this hope before him, he crushed down his furious resentment, and remained silent and passive.

The parlour of the Blue Bear was neither crowded nor noisy that night. Two or three of the villagers were enjoying themselves in a quiet fashion over a game of dominoes, and one solitary commercial traveller was seated at a table writing off his day's orders for the post. That was all which gave the piace the appearance of other than a private house. Outside, the same stillness prevailed—the market square and the street beyond, being almost wholly free of loungers or pedestrians.

As the time passed Dick cast many a pedestrians.

As the time passed Dick cast many a discontented look towards the door, as if tired of waiting for the coming of him whom he expected. Then he drew forth the letter he had received at the post office, and re-perused it.

Saddenly he started, bent his head forward, and listened. Evidently he heard something, for he quickly returned the letter to his pocket, rose, and quitted the room.

heard something, for he quickly returned the letter to his pocket, rose, and quitted the room.

The landlord, who was with the others
in the private room, heard the same noise
and made a hasty signal to the rest.

"Tis the sound of wheels—he's coming," he whispered. "I'll put out the light; then you can stand at the window and see him arrive, while I go and receive him as I do all guests."

By the time the landlord had got to the front entrance the sound of the coming vehicle was heard as it rathid ower the stongs of the neighbouring afreet, and when't was about to enter the market place the ostler emerged from the kitchen with a brilliant light which strongly illuminated the whole front of the inn. Philip and Jim guessed that this had been done on purpose that they might obtain a clear view of the new comer, who just then made his appearance in a two seated-gig, which he pulled up sharp at the inn door.

"I hope you are well, sir," said the landlord."

"Thank you, Mr Barstead. I thank our very much for the expression of that "I hope you are well, sir," said the landbord."

"Thank you, Mr Barstead. I thank you very much for the expression of that hope; and I am grateful to be able to add that I am at present in the enjoyment of good health, which may be considered wonderful seeing the great harassing work I have to undergo. But I know the source of that and every blessing, Mr. Barstead, and I duly show my appreciation by attending to the appetite which a good Providence gives me. Therefore if you will have the exceeding goodness to provide me with supper, I shall partake of the same with due thankfulness."
"All right, sir. Shall we surve it in a private room, or in the commercial room? "I am a modest man, Mr Barstead, and do not affect unnecessary public appearance. Therefore, if agreeable and convenient to you, I would prefer to eat in private, especially as I expect to meet with—bh, sh; yea," he added, as at this moment Dick made his appearance, "how do you do, Richard? I am glad to met with you again. I hope you have not bean waiting long."

it you again. I hope you have not sen waiting long?"
"Near about an hour," answered

Dick.

"Dear me, so long? But do not regpine on that account, Richard; for the exercise of patience is highly beneficial to body and mind, and if during the hour you have waited you have been properly engaged, my delay in coming will not have been to your disadvantage. How is that afflicted young person, your sister?"

"So I ve heard, sir. But we ain't all alike, sir, some are worse nor others."

"You speak very truly, Mr. Barstead, very truly indeed."

By this time the hostler back the horse and gig in charge, and the new arrival—proceeded by the landford and formation of the served in the private process. The served in the private parlour.

Iron in the Blood The

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron. is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "athousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and v. "dized blood permeates every ," rt of the body, repairing dann, "s and vaste, searching out n. "rbid secretions, and leaving othing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of "s. uonderful success of the remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhoa, Boils, Nervous Affections. Chills and Fevers, Humors Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low state of the system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form, its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vipor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building up an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures, to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

which can be cured by a ely resort to this standard preparation, as has been proved by the hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors. It is acknowledged by many prominent physicians to be the most reliable preparation ever in-troduced for the relief and cure of all Lung complaints, and is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years. When resorted to in season it seldom fails to effect a speedy cure in the most severe care in the most severe cases of Copples, Bronchitis, Croup, Whooping Cough, Induenza, Asthma, Colds, Sore Throat, Pains or Sore-ness in the Chest and Side, Liver Complaint, Bleeding at the Lungs, &c. Wistar's Balsam does not dry up a Cough, and leave the cause behind, as is the case with most preparations, but it loosens and cleanses the lungs, and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.
