General Denekine's fall, if the foregoing report is confirmed, is probably a result of his recent defeats at the hands of the Bolsheviki in Southern Russia. During the past autumn Denekine's forces moved steadily northward, defeating the soviet troops in many battles and apparently threatening Moscow. After he had reached Orel, 120 miles south of the soviet capital, however, he encountered stern resistance, which soon developed into a resistance, which soon developed into a resistance, and the content of the been replaced by a group known as the "Vozsozhdenye Roosie," a term resistance, which soon developed into a fight extending over a virtually continuous front 400 miles in length.

Bolshevik cavalry finally filtered through the Denekine lines, breaking communications in the rear, and forced the auti-soviet forces to fall back rapidly.
