The third meeting for the season of the public schools during the day were given the work of teaching in the night schools as well. But as one or two were taken down sick on account of overwork, no day teachers were employed in the night schools last winter. This year it is proposed to employ the day school teachers. Several young men who are students in the medical schools and the university, and who were qualified and counted on this work to help them through, will thus be disappointed, while the ability of the regular teachers in the schools will be impaired for day work they teach at night as well.

OUR MEDICAL STUDENTS. etting Ready for their Annual Dinners-

World Reporter at a Medical's Meeting. A World reporter took a stroll down east on Saturday and stepped into the Toronto school of medicine. On the board was the school of medicine. On the board was the announcement of a meeting of students at 11 a.m. to elect a dinner committee. As it was just 11 the reporter entered the large lecture gallery. He was delighted at the sight which met his eyes—it brought back the scenes of other days. There were over a hundred medicals in the room, most of them sitting up on the top of the seats with their feet on the desks. Every other man was smoking a pine or cigarette. Seven or line of discussion was against an alleged "clique" who were trying to run the dinner. The debate was hot and lively, but courteous Harry Nolan. It may be mentioned that the annual meeting of the grand they had nothing that the annual meeting of the grand or spect for the chair and for one another. The quality of the speaking was far ahead of the arts students up in the park, both as regards fluency and choice of language. It is no wonder that doctors become politicians when they are such "spouters" in their student days. They are somewhat older than the arts students, and have nearly all had some experience of life before entering medicine. From the facility with which the chairman used the chaik and blackboard the reporter suspected him of having one been a school teacher. When the proceedings were at their liveliest and one speaker was making personal charges, a fourth-year man turned to the reporter and asked, "Why don't you get excited?" The reporter, however, kept cool. There is no better training for students than such meetings as these. But they should never allow any little differences that arises in their meeting to extend beyond them. For instance on Saturday one students aid that his going to the dinner would, depend on the composition of the committee—a sentiment that was promptly frowned down on. An

As regards the appearance of the regiment it was all that could be desired; while it far excelled in dress its sister corps the Q.O.R., yet the appearance of the latter was evidently wanting, there being noticeably a great number of recruits in the ranks, whose endeavors to change step were often painful to behold. The reporter knew by experience that as students they would find a line to divide on—as students always do. The line was found immediately. As soon as the minutes were read one gent got up to make a personal explanation. That was enough—a row, or rather discussion, commenced that lasted for two hours. As far as the reporter could learn the men split on Victoria university as against the university of Toronto, adherents of both these institutions making up the school. Another line of discussion was against an alleged when about eighty-five members of the order of railroad conductors of the United States and Canada arrived by the Great Western railway from Niagara Falls. They were accompanied by their wives, cousins and sweethearts. The party immediately repaired to the Rossin house, where comfortable quarters were assigned them and every attention shown by Mr. Irish and the courteous Harry Nolan. Col. Hawkins. The colonel said that it was impossible to mention the name of President Arthur without having vivid recollections of the dead president, and he sincerely hoped Mr. Arthur would carry out the policy inaugurated by his predecessor. The speaker then gave a glowing account of the beauties of the neighboring republic, of its free institutions, its progressive spirit, its vast acreage, its great orators and statesmen, the return of harmony among all sections, and wound up by saying that he had no doubt but that he would see the day when the population of the United States would swell to 500,000,000;

The chairman announced that the next toast of the evening was "The Order of Railroad Conductors of the United States and Canada," and he would take the liberty to add to it, "and their wives and sweethearts." which met the unanimous approval of the male portion of the company.

Mr. J. C. Wheaton, the grand conductor, replied to the toast in a well-connected appeach, He reviewed the history of the order, and remarked that no society in existence had passed through so many vicissitudes and met with the same opposition as the order of railroad conductors. Birth was given to the order about fourteen years ago in Mendota, Ill. It was only a little over a year ago since the society was transplanted to Ontario, and now there were over three hundred members in the province, and nearly seventy in Toronto alone.
