an occurrence took place that shows the necessity of strict surveillance over the proceedings of the police. Three or fow gentlemen were attending the opera at the Horticultural gardens. They were walking on the balcony that opens off the upper gallery, when a foliceman ordered them off. They immediately left the balcony, but one of the number, not walking fast enough to suit the fiery zeal of the guardian of the peace, was seized by the arm and jostled down the stairs. When remough to suit the policeman instantly arrested the gentleman and dragged him down to the police station and put him unler arrest for being disorderly. The policeman's zeal did not stop here, however. Two friends of the malefactor, who had accompanied him to the police station, were arrested for presuming to do so. The case was brought up Monday morning and instantly dismissed, but the name of the gentleman who was arrested has appeared at least in one of the city papers as arrested for being "disorderly." public an idea of how Lotta was appresisted in London:

Herve has written to Mr. Solomon the following letter: "Dear Sir—I congratulate you on your good execution of my music of 'Nitouche,' and you will oblige me by expressing my entire satisfaction to your band. Please remember me kindly to Miss Lotta, who plays scharmingly Nitouche, and the other artists who support her so cleverly—Messrs. R. Pateman, F. Wyatt, F. Darreil, &c., whom I found exceedingly good." And this amounts to pleasing testimony. I did not know this till I revelved my chef's note, But I have seen "Nitouche," and I consider it—the best thing by a long way that Lotta has done since her sojours at the Opera conique. It is well acted. Lotta is what I call an irresistible droll; her fun is unflagging, and if she makes her effects by methods which are not quite recognized by our out-and-dried scolists, she nevertheless makes them, and keeps her audience in screams of laughter.
