

The Indian chief felt very sad at the death of Brock, but he kept right on fighting with the English. He was killed in one of the battles of the war. He and his braves were in the swamp, not far from a river, when the Americans came upon them. The rest of the English soldiers had run away, but the Indians stayed and fought the Americans.

The American leader shot Tecumseh just as the red man had his tomahawk raised to strike him.

The soldiers treated the red man's dead body very badly, though he had died a brave death, fighting for the people and the country he loved.

Amongst his people are to be found still very many who love the English. For Canada, after all, has been very kind to the red man, whose land she took.

The two trees still stand side by side, whispering to each other.

The school is quiet now and the windows are closed.