Our next visit to the Point was on March 14, 15 and 16, by which time a large number of changes had taken place. We arrived late in the afternoon of the 13th and the next morning our ears were greeted by songs of the Robin, Song Sparrow and Cardinal, and the call of the Chewink. Before the day had fully dawned we were on our way to the end of the Point to see, if possible, the northern migrations in the very act of arrival from the south. On our way down the Carolina Wrens were added to the above-named chorus and numbers of other birds were heard, particularly Bluebirds and Crows. At the end of the Point we found we were doomed to disappointment as we saw nothing whatever arrive from the south. To our surprise we saw a small number of English Sparrows migrating south and this experience was repeated in the days following, but northern migration of the same species was also noted on the latter days. A short distance away from the end of the Point we saw a large flock of Cedar Waxwings which we judged were just arriving, and on the 15th a flock of Cowbirds in the same condition, but both of these were flying vigorously and might have rested near the end of the Point.

Two curious facts were noted, first, three Shore Larks came from near the end of the Point and flew north-east across the Lake, only a few feet above the water. They disappeared in the distance still holding the same direction. The other occurrence was that of a small flock of about nine Crossbills which flew almost directly east up the Lake. We watched them also until they had disappeared, still holding their course.

The jungle chorus on this trip was something to be remembered. The birds seemed to congregate in the same locality as that in which we found them six weeks before but their numbers were very much increased and the later date brought
