Depression in Paris.

The accounts of industrial depression in Paris and the large number of laborers and artisans reported out of work there excited the curiosity of a correspondent of the London Economist. Most of the statements made public had come direct from the complaining class, and it was a matter of some conjecture as to whether they could be corroborated by independent examinations. The octroi duties levied on food and drink are an indication of earnings, and if but half of the "laboring class" were employed the octroi receipts would indicate it. The receipts from wine, beer and spirits declined from 65,673,000 francs in 1881 to but 62,267,000 francs in 1883, a decline which it is noted might be explained by the decreased tax on wine in 1882. The receipts from flour declined from 30,412,000 francs in 1881 to 29,892,000 francs in 1883. But the decline in the death rate of Paris within a year, in the absence of any special sanitary reason therefor, is taken as evidence of some numbers of laborers and others having returned to the province within a year, which would account for the decline in food tax receipts. Savings banks deposits gained over 2,000,000 francs in the last quarter of 1883 as against 1881, and the gross amount of loans by the state pawnshops (Mont de Piete) gained nearly 3,000,000 francs in 1883 as compared with 1881. The number of business failures in Paris also has remained nearly stationary; 1,654 in 1881, 1,696 in 1882, and 1,615 in 1883. These facts do not make good the claim of an industrial crisis. The trouble in the carpenter trade was caused by a strike for higher wages, which was refused. The bulk of the work to be done was sent to the provinces, and the strikers are consequently feeling the effects of their ill-advised action. The logical outcome of a protective policy when carried out is found in the concluding feature of the industrial trouble: "Some of the men demand that a tax should be put on made-up work brought from the provinces to protect the Paris workmen from this competition."

Freight Rates.

The drop in wheat caused a slight boom in ocean freight rates, the market being livelier than for weeks and higher. The following rates, reported by Henderson Bros., agents of the Anchor line, were current on the New York market during last week:

Ports.	Flour, per 100 lbs.	Wheat, per bu.
Liverpool . . . . .	8.44c	4.0c
London . . . . .	14.06c	7.0c
Glasgow . . . . .	14.06c	6.0c
Leith . . . . .	14.06c	9.0c
Bristol . . . . .	14.06c	7.0c

Shipments from New York last week were 55,337 bags and 2,500 bbls. flour, and 160,292 bus. wheat.

The Chicago trouble continues and rates to the east are badly demoralized.
