"But how didst thou ever get such steeds as these! asked Tomaso, looking admiringly at the splendid animals, well groomed and well fed, fresh and vigorous.
"We took them," said Vittore proudly.
"We came upon a camp of soldiers with horses and to spare, and Francisco asked them would they trade with him, and offered money, but they jeered and shouted and drove us off. Then Francisco stood before me while I crept up to those three and loosened their halters. The soldiers drank and sang; some lay and snored; they thought that we were gone, then suddenly—" his voice sinking with excitement.

"What happened?" asked Tomaso with interest. "I am glad that thou show'st thyself a brave lad, Vittore; what hap-

"Won? Against three?" cried Tomaso.

"He scattered them like the wind," said Vittore. "I know not how. He is a giant. He flung me on this black horse here; he mounted, I had the halters of the others in my hand. We rushed away. Of one he broke the head, I think, with his thick staff, and had his arm hit hard, but 'tis not hurt, he says. Some followed awhile, but they drank too deep; we left them like men dazed and mad, some falling by the road. It was a great business, cousin, but I felt no fear; Francisco is a brave, brave man,"

NO MISTAKE THERE

He had been fumbling at the latch of a gate for five minutes when a pedestrian came along and halted to inquire:

"Is there anything wrong with the gate that it won't open?"

"No, sir—nothing wrong—nothing wrong with the gate," was the reply. "There is sometimes something wrong with me, but with the gate—never. Always right here. Always to be depended on. Never knew it to make a mistake."

He fussed away again for a minute or two without accomplishing anything, and then the other took hold and opened the gate and queried:

"Sure this is your house? You wouldn't want to try to get into anyone else's house at this time of night you know."

"Smy house all right—all right. Steady ole house. Always right here when I come home. Never found it a block up or down or on the other side of the street. That's why I love this house—you can depend on it."

it/ Never goes off on a frolic. Always right there. Been going to the lodge for years and years, and was never thrown down yet. Say, stranger."

"Yes."

"You have been very kind—very."

"Don't mention it."

"But I must mention it. I want to ask you a question as man to man. I am in the con—the condition known as 'sprung' No use to deny it. When I am sober I say so; when I am sprung I say so. Square man, I am. What I want to know is this.

He had been fumbling at the latch for five minutes.

Easter is around here somewhere. Have I got sprung before or after it?"

"Just a little bit before."

"Then that's all right. Thanks—thanks. I made a fool of myself by getting sprung three days after Christmas, and I don't want to make the same mistake about Easter. Before, eh? That's good—very good—just as it should be. Good night, sir, and—and—good night."
