The Story of a Log From the Old Beacon Light in Harbor.

Serving for eighty-five years as part of the sub-structure of the old Beacon Light at the mouth of the St. John harbor, then tossed about the waters of the Bay of Fundy and finally pulled up on the shores of Mace's Bay, where it was manufactured into boards for a cabin for a motor boat a few days ago, is the record of a large white pine log. In 1828, when the Beacon Light was demolished, it went adrift. A short time later it was hauled on the shore of Mace's Bay by Robert J. Mawhinney and set aside for future use. Last Monday his son John was looking about for a log to cut into boards and selected this old pine. Spite the fact that it had been in use for nearly a century, it was in a perfect state of preservation and turned out some of the finest boards ever seen in that part of the country. There was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the log and it seem was not a knot in the lo seen in that part of the country. Get On Nicely With Track Work On Market Square

Excellent progress in the paving of the track section on Market Square is reported. It has been carried on without interruption to traffic, with the exception of one evening when the New Brunswick Power Co. took the ears off the north track. The north track has now been paved and the south track and devil strip will be paved up to the cross over by tonight. The portion at the foot of King street, where the Junction is made with Prince the Junction is made with Prince the work. One thing which has made it possible to keep the street cars in operation is the use of a pitch joint instead of grout. With the latter it is said traffic would have to cease for at least ten days.

SAW TWO MOOSE.

While coming into the city this inorning, John Typer of the Loch Lomond road saw two bull moose grazing contentedly in a cabbage field on a farm on the Hickey Road. They did not seem to mind the approach of the people on the road, but stood there gazing at them, until the owner of the people on the road, but stood there say in the two monarchs of the forest cleared the fence and disappeared in the woods. Mr. Tyner reported in the moose were full grown, but their antlers had not as yet passed the green stage.

A TAME CROW.

Can a crow, one of the wildest of the wildest of the feathery species, be tamed? The vast majority of people will answer no, but there is a crow at Dipper Harbor that will fly to the shoulder of one of the shoulder of one of the steamer Connors Bros. for St. John, passengers were surprised to see a crow light on the shoulder of Mrs. Boyle and eat as she fed it. They were told that the bird was in the habit of visiting there when it was quite young and it continued to inhabit that district. As it grew older it grew bolder and would approach Mrs. Boyle to the Ben Lomond House at Lock
