S. Stephenson, Propriet THE REAL QUESTION IS ONE OF

W. D. Howells has published a reply to the bitter cry of Mass Lillian Bell, who complained that excessive prudery was crippling art in the United States, preventing novelists from discussing "the great things of life, the problems of existence which are tearing like, wolves at your hearts and mine."

Mr. Howells says that the wolfish problems of existence are largely econolems of existence are largely economical. "With those who have no money they are the question of a job and the pay they shall get for it. This is of a far more vital significance and heart-rending consequence than the critic or the novelist, even, can often be persnaded to believe. With those who have money it is the question of losing it, and the anguish and squalor of comand the anguish and squator of com-ing down to narrower things; or it is the secret remorse for wasting it, the corroding shame for spending it selfish-ly while many hunger and freeze in sight of the riot. Then, for a real, wolfish, tearing problem, a mortgage is not a bad thing; and a note falling due at the bank and no money to pay it is very well," The fact is that the novel-ists have paid too much and not too little attention to the anguish occa-sioned by the unfulfilled desire of A to marry B, and too little to the far mor important question of where A and B are going to get three meals a day

The government in doing this did not even take the trouble, did not know enough, to find ou whether it owned the island or not. The result is that now there are four claimants to the island, the Dominion the Dominion's Yankee lessee, the city of Vancouver and the Province of Britist. Columbia. The city of Vancouver first manned it with police to prevent its occupation by the Americans, but the Province has now come to the res-cue, and a Provincial Liberal govern-ment has declared its defiance of Laurier & Co. He had a special constable sworn in, and together they formally took possession for the Government, of the province of the island, that is claimed by the city as well as the Eominion, and also by Mr. Ludgate. But the Marriage Went Ahead Just the Same.

Sensational Divorce Cases in England and France-The Late Presi-

London, May 3.—An unusual scene occurred in Christ church, Piccadilly, to-day, upon the occasion of the marriage of a prominent colonel, well known in society, who was divorced from his first wife. The opponents of the femarriage of divorced persons interrupted the curate in the performance of the ceremony, and read a protest, declaring that the colonel had a canonical wife living. The congregation hissed the objectors, who were forcibly ejected from the church.

London, May 1.-The last mail from Mombass contained information of the scicking death of J. F. S. O'Hara, an Englishman employed in surveying shocking death of J. F. S. O'Hara, an Englishman employed in surveying the East African Protectorate, who was attacked and killed by a lion.

Mr. O'Hara, who was accompanied by his wife and children, was encamped near the river Vol. He had with him a number of native servants, but was suffering from a severe attack of fever. He retired to sleepf with his tent open, but was awakeried towards midnight by the shouts and, cries of the natives. On rising, he saw a lion a few yards from the tent, and found that all his natives had fled. Notwithstanding the fact that he was to weak as to be hardly afole to walk, he seized his gun and attempted to kill the animal. The night was dark however, and the animal succeeded in making off into the bush. A few hours afterwards his wife was roused by the shouts of her husband, and on rising found that the lion had returned, forced its way through the opening of the tent, and was aftempting to drag off her husband, camp bed and all. Her shouts and the struggles of her husband roused the servants, and with great difficulty the lion was again beaten off, but Mr. O'Hara had this time suffered such severe injuries that he died soon afterwards.
