LONG LIVE THE KING.

George V, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain yond the Seas, King, Defender of the tial resources to encompass the world. Faith, Emperor of India.

At a few minutes past the half-hour and fortress, the Crown of Empire was placed upon the head of Britain's King and thus was completed the solemn and reverent act of consecration to the sovereignty of the British people. The solemn ceremony was performed by His Eminence, the Archgramme of to-day, in which Victorians horrible fear-or pretence of fearbecame one with their fellow-subjects of the newly crowned king in a belt of continuous coronation celebration, upon the significance of the occasion may not be out of place.

The sovereign of the British Empire is becoming not less but more an outoldest of which we have any record monarchy of the British Empire is the nearest approach to a consummation associated genius of many men has devised.

With the rights of Demos well defined and guarded with a scruple that is jealous and perfervid in these days, it must not be thought that the throne and personality of the sovereign lose mere symbolism. One can imagine that, were the throne of Britain to be occupied by kings whose lives were too short for them to attain years of maturity and full-orbed manhood, a succession of these would, within the short period of a century, result in a marked difference in affairs through out the empire. The mature womanhood and motherhood of Queen Victoria proved a benediction to the British race, while the astute and sympaity by the late King Edward VII. wa waved for the nation's good
