

SIX

THE STAR, ST. JOHN N. B. TUESDAY, JUNE 8 1909

Health!!!

Every drop of Magi Water is bubbling with life and health. A delight to the eye—a pleasure to the palate—of benefit to you physically.

Drink MAGI WATER

for its Purity, wholesomeness and delightful flavor.

Magi Water is a pure, natural mineral water bottled exclusively at the Springs. A delicious water—pleasant soda fountain drink. Superior to soda with whiskey—both for flavor and healthfulness. Comes in pints, splits and half gallons. Can be had at cafes, hotels, bars, chemists, on all R. R. cars and at your grocer's by the bottle or the case.

An interesting booklet about Magi Water will be sent free on request.

Sold from Coast to Coast

CALEDONIA SPRINGS COMPANY, Ltd.
Caledonia Springs, Ontario

McINTYRE & COMEAU Ltd.

DISTRIBUTING AGENTS

FRANCE WILL SPEND SIX HUNDRED MILLIONS

Torpedo Boat Armored—Bulgarians and Turks Fighting—Australia Not Afraid of Boer Trust.

PARIS, June 7.—The naval programme approved by the cabinet involves an expenditure of $60,000,000 covering a period of ten years. Six battleships of the Danton type, six of the République type and four armored cruisers. The Gambetta type are included in the estimates.

PRINCETON, N. J., June 7.—James T. Moore, 23rd, of Elmira, N. Y., was elected captain of the Princeton University track team for next year, to-day.

MOREHEAD CITY, N. C., June 7.—While on her way to sea from Beaufort, where she was towed with engines disabled yesterday, the torpedo boat Winslow, with Massachusetts naval reserves aboard, ran aground in the harbor here today.

BERLIN, June 7.—A solemn dispatch to the Frankfurter Zeitung says that a fight lasting eleven hours has occurred on the Bulgo-Turkish frontier between Bulgarian and Turkish frontier guards. The casualties are not known.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., June 7.—In the presence of Governor Hughes and representatives of many of the important universities and colleges in the east, Rev. Chas. Alexander Richmond, former pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church of Albany, was formally inducted into office today as president of Union College and chancellor of Union University.

WARWICK, R. I., June 7.—Public institutions and church organizations are benefited by the will of the late Mrs. Henry G. Russell, a wealthy Providence resident, to the amount of $33,000, filed for probate at the office of the town clerk late this afternoon. The will also disposes of money bequests to individuals, amounting to $101,350 more.

STONEY, N. S. W., June 7.—The meat traders here and in New Zealand appear not to fear the capture of the Australian trade by the so-called American beef trust. They declare that such a project is impracticable.

RAWLINS, Wyo., June 7.—Edward Payson Weston reached Rawlins tonight after walking forty miles today, part of the distance in a heavy rain-storm.

WAVE OF PROSPERITY SEEN BY THE PROPHETS

End of Roosevelt Rule, Settlement of Tariffs, and Good Crops the Reasons.

WOMAN STRIPPED, THEN TARRED AND FEATHERED

And Thrown into River—Had Been Warned to Leave—Companion Beaten.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., June 7.—From a canvass made today of the principal iron and steel manufacturers, it is apparent that a wave of prosperity, equal to any experienced in this country is about to take place.

From a majority of interviews secured here today the fear is expressed that want in the iron and steel business will return with such a rush as to cause congestion.

NEW YORK, June 7.—The end of the Roosevelt administration, quiet settlement of the tariff and the assurance of excellent crops, are given as the three-fold basis for prophesying the approach of great national prosperity in the annual report of the consolidated steel exchange, issued here today.

The report frowns upon the plan of the suspended lockage house of Erie and St. Paul to resume business on a basis of a fifteen per cent. cash payment on its debts, unless ample assets are on hand to secure the firm's notes for the remaining 85 per cent.

ANNUAL MEETING OF FAIRVILLE CHURCH

The Baptist Church of Fairville held its annual meeting last evening. Reports presented showed that the funds of the church were in excellent condition. The past year has proven most successful and the edifice now ranks high among the suburban churches.

The annual financial statement was read by Walter Rose, secretary-treasurer. The Sunday collections amounted to $794.48. There was collected to help pay off the church debt $1,011, total cash receipts from collections in the church were $2,382.27.

The total expenditure during the year amounted to $2,332.61. Much credit is due to the pastor, Rev. F. B. Bishop, and to C. P. Baker, secretary of the board of the firm, ultimately becoming himself the head of the business.

On attaining to a position of affluence James entered Parliament. He died in 1857. He left five sons—Charles, Frank, Walter, George and Alan—and two daughters. Each of them received a very large sum of money and his will. One son and a daughter survive.

Charles Morrison was educated at Edinburgh and Cambridge. He completed his education by a visit to the United States, where his father had acquired various commercial interests. After his father's death his wealth steadily increased, until he earned for himself the title of "the richest man in the city of London."

His business was that of a financier—largely in the way of underwriting or promoting enterprises which he had supported in their infancy. He would buy anything and sell anything, and his deals almost always turned out well.

Until his great age made his appearance remarkable he looked like a not too prosperous clerk. He was a man of the strictest probity, never doing a stroke of business he could not have only to be identified to have the most perfect of him. But his accustomed reserve made him say nothing, and he steadily tramped the whole of the way home.

It is told of him that one night, a year or two back, Charles Morrison got out at Tilbury, the station before Pangbourne, by mistake. It was rather late and he walked to an inn a little out, and asked for a trap to drive him to Basildon. The landlord appeared to eye him with great disfavor, and curtly told him that he could not have a trap. Mr. Morrison had, of course, only to be identified to have the most perfect of him. But his accustomed reserve made him say nothing, and he steadily tramped the whole of the way home.

MADE A FORTUNE OF £12,000,000

Lived With the One Idea of Making Money.

Son of a Rich Draper—Wore Silks, Clothes, Did Not Smoke, and Died a Bachelor.

Mr. Charles Morrison, one of the wealthiest men in the City of London, died on Tuesday, at the advanced age of ninety-two. He leaves an estate of enormous dimensions, estimated by well-informed persons to be considerably over £12,000,000 in value. It was a saying on the Stock Exchange that the taxes on his estate would buy Dreadnoughts.

On £12,000,000 the maximum death duty of 15 per cent. and the 5 per cent. succession duty will yield £2,400,000 to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Most of Mr. Morrison's wealth consisted in huge blocks of office buildings such as Basildon House, Finchbury House, and the like. Up to within a few months ago he was a constant attendant at his office, and went into every detail of his business.

Mr. Morrison's personal habits were almost austere in their simplicity. Dignified, tall, though slightly bent by age, he was a familiar figure in the city, but his dislike of publicity made him refuse the natural position to which his wealth would have entitled him.

His relatives cannot recollect that he ever smoked, and he was almost a teetotaler. Though he kept two or three carriages, he never bought a motor car; in fact, he never rode in one; and his annual expenditure never exceeded £1,000.

Many queer stories of Mr. Morrison's eccentricities are told in the city. One of the most curious was told when he was a young man. He was apt to be absent-minded. Upon one occasion, it is said, he arrived at his office in a new silk hat, from which the tissue-paper in which it had been wrapped had not been removed.

He much disliked going to the tailor, and in later years was a regular patron of a tailor-made clothes shop. He was scorned any conveyance for town use more luxurious than his hansom cab.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

MADE A FORTUNE OF £12,000,000

Lived With the One Idea of Making Money.

Son of a Rich Draper—Wore Silks, Clothes, Did Not Smoke, and Died a Bachelor.

Mr. Charles Morrison, one of the wealthiest men in the City of London, died on Tuesday, at the advanced age of ninety-two. He leaves an estate of enormous dimensions, estimated by well-informed persons to be considerably over £12,000,000 in value. It was a saying on the Stock Exchange that the taxes on his estate would buy Dreadnoughts.

On £12,000,000 the maximum death duty of 15 per cent. and the 5 per cent. succession duty will yield £2,400,000 to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Most of Mr. Morrison's wealth consisted in huge blocks of office buildings such as Basildon House, Finchbury House, and the like. Up to within a few months ago he was a constant attendant at his office, and went into every detail of his business.

Mr. Morrison's personal habits were almost austere in their simplicity. Dignified, tall, though slightly bent by age, he was a familiar figure in the city, but his dislike of publicity made him refuse the natural position to which his wealth would have entitled him.

His relatives cannot recollect that he ever smoked, and he was almost a teetotaler. Though he kept two or three carriages, he never bought a motor car; in fact, he never rode in one; and his annual expenditure never exceeded £1,000.

Many queer stories of Mr. Morrison's eccentricities are told in the city. One of the most curious was told when he was a young man. He was apt to be absent-minded. Upon one occasion, it is said, he arrived at his office in a new silk hat, from which the tissue-paper in which it had been wrapped had not been removed.

He much disliked going to the tailor, and in later years was a regular patron of a tailor-made clothes shop. He was scorned any conveyance for town use more luxurious than his hansom cab.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

MADE A FORTUNE OF £12,000,000

Lived With the One Idea of Making Money.

Son of a Rich Draper—Wore Silks, Clothes, Did Not Smoke, and Died a Bachelor.

Mr. Charles Morrison, one of the wealthiest men in the City of London, died on Tuesday, at the advanced age of ninety-two. He leaves an estate of enormous dimensions, estimated by well-informed persons to be considerably over £12,000,000 in value. It was a saying on the Stock Exchange that the taxes on his estate would buy Dreadnoughts.

On £12,000,000 the maximum death duty of 15 per cent. and the 5 per cent. succession duty will yield £2,400,000 to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Most of Mr. Morrison's wealth consisted in huge blocks of office buildings such as Basildon House, Finchbury House, and the like. Up to within a few months ago he was a constant attendant at his office, and went into every detail of his business.

Mr. Morrison's personal habits were almost austere in their simplicity. Dignified, tall, though slightly bent by age, he was a familiar figure in the city, but his dislike of publicity made him refuse the natural position to which his wealth would have entitled him.

His relatives cannot recollect that he ever smoked, and he was almost a teetotaler. Though he kept two or three carriages, he never bought a motor car; in fact, he never rode in one; and his annual expenditure never exceeded £1,000.

Many queer stories of Mr. Morrison's eccentricities are told in the city. One of the most curious was told when he was a young man. He was apt to be absent-minded. Upon one occasion, it is said, he arrived at his office in a new silk hat, from which the tissue-paper in which it had been wrapped had not been removed.

He much disliked going to the tailor, and in later years was a regular patron of a tailor-made clothes shop. He was scorned any conveyance for town use more luxurious than his hansom cab.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

MADE A FORTUNE OF £12,000,000

Lived With the One Idea of Making Money.

Son of a Rich Draper—Wore Silks, Clothes, Did Not Smoke, and Died a Bachelor.

Mr. Charles Morrison, one of the wealthiest men in the City of London, died on Tuesday, at the advanced age of ninety-two. He leaves an estate of enormous dimensions, estimated by well-informed persons to be considerably over £12,000,000 in value. It was a saying on the Stock Exchange that the taxes on his estate would buy Dreadnoughts.

On £12,000,000 the maximum death duty of 15 per cent. and the 5 per cent. succession duty will yield £2,400,000 to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Most of Mr. Morrison's wealth consisted in huge blocks of office buildings such as Basildon House, Finchbury House, and the like. Up to within a few months ago he was a constant attendant at his office, and went into every detail of his business.

Mr. Morrison's personal habits were almost austere in their simplicity. Dignified, tall, though slightly bent by age, he was a familiar figure in the city, but his dislike of publicity made him refuse the natural position to which his wealth would have entitled him.

His relatives cannot recollect that he ever smoked, and he was almost a teetotaler. Though he kept two or three carriages, he never bought a motor car; in fact, he never rode in one; and his annual expenditure never exceeded £1,000.

Many queer stories of Mr. Morrison's eccentricities are told in the city. One of the most curious was told when he was a young man. He was apt to be absent-minded. Upon one occasion, it is said, he arrived at his office in a new silk hat, from which the tissue-paper in which it had been wrapped had not been removed.

He much disliked going to the tailor, and in later years was a regular patron of a tailor-made clothes shop. He was scorned any conveyance for town use more luxurious than his hansom cab.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

One of the most striking things about him was that he had a marvellous memory. Not long ago he quoted to the press the first two stanzas of a poem by Byron which he said he had read for over forty years.

Buy Her a Wiss

There is nothing a woman appreciates more than good sharp scissors that stay sharp. Clean smooth results are derived from the use of Wiss Scissors and Shears. They will cost you no more than inferior brands. Cheap scissors are poor economy.

WISS SHEARS

The Wiss guarantee, absolute satisfaction—or a new pair—or your money back, is your protection.

Popular Styles, 60c. to $1.00, according to size, wherever good cutlery is sold.

A WISS Razor assures the smoothest shave.

300 DELEGATES HAVE ARRIVED

MONCTON, N. B., June 7.—A special train bearing over three hundred delegates from Quebec and Montreal to attend the convention of the Catholic Order of Foresters here this morning, arrived in Moncton about three o'clock this afternoon.

Tonight the delegates were entertained at a French play put on by local talent, in the Grand Opera House, under the auspices of the local court. Among the delegates are E. A. Gries, High Medical Adviser, Directors of Council, H. C. McCullum, A. G. Brunsard, W. Lalonde, Ed. Piche, N. U. Vanasse, A. P. Vanasse, Thos. Monaghan, J. B. Aisconette, legal adviser, A. A. Gibault, P. C. B. of Provincial Court.

Among the visitors are Camille De Martigny, Advocate, St. Jerome; J. A. Quimet, E. Langlois, Dr. Lord, Eugene Rouillard. Tomorrow morning the delegates will attend a special mass at St. Bernard's Church, when a sermon will be preached by Mar. LePailleur and an English sermon by Father Savage. In the afternoon French will be preached by Mar. LePailleur and an English sermon by Father Savage. In the afternoon French will be preached by Mar. LePailleur and an English sermon by Father Savage.

Instructions have been sent to the authorities at Waterville, Maine, to bury there Jules Cormier, of Pellerin Settlement, Kent Co., who was killed by a train in Maine Sunday night. The mother of the deceased is at the point of death and