

THE ECONOMIST

JULY 29, 1852.

The Steamship Canada arrived at Halifax on Tuesday morning, with Liverpool dates to the 25th of June, and 82 passengers. The C. exchanged extracts with the steamship Asia on the 26th, about the same date, and the 27th, about the same time.

In Manchester the manœuvres were fully em- ployed.

Freights at Liverpool were well maintained for coal, cotton, &c.

Freight Rates.—St. John's Price, rates of 181 miles average £12; 10s; 10d. in 1851. A lot of 16 miles of 15s. per ton, Liverpool. New Brunswick for Flax and Boards, cargo only £9.50 per standard, another £8.176.00 and £9.10s. averaging £9.50 per standard; a mile or a shade more. Linen £9.50 per standard, £8.24.00 a part of £9.50 per standard.

Information from the Consul, St. John's, stated that the negotiations between England and France and the United States for the reduction of Atlantic postage, were still pending no answer having been given by the United States.

In a few days the screw schooner Isabel, Capt. Ingledale will sail on another search for Sir John Franklin through Jones' and St. Paul's Straits, and afterwards along the Western shores of Baffin Bay.

On Monday afternoon the new Canadian steamship Asia was launched from H. Steele & Son's building at Greenock. She is 2402 tons burthen, with Engines of the side lever class, 850 horse power, and working up to 1000.

FRIDAY.—The events of the week as far as ex- plained in the "Economist" of the 25th, were the trials of the members of the Canadian Legislative against the dictation of the President. On Tuesday the Assembly had the budget under discussion and refused their assent to some of the terms.

Louis Napoleon who was watching the proceed- ings with great interest, sent a note to his French Minister stating that he intended to inter- cept their powers in refusing to accept any documents sanctioned by the Council of State. The Meeting broke up in confusion, but next day re- assembled and again took up the discussion of the budget, voting it as independently as to throw overboard £1,450,000 of the £1,500,000 for the donation of the Patriotic Fund.

This officially caused a standstill in the mind.

Chargement, Bedau, Lamontagne and Lefebvre, in consequence of their refusal to take the oaths, are excluded, but allowed to retain their half pay.

FRIDAY.—The Piedmontese Chamber Deputies have decided upon modifying certain articles of the Constitution, and have voted a bill to the effect that Pope has given 16 communions the sentence against the Englishman Murray, to hard labour at the gallows.

TAN.—Great Britain.—This year the British screw-steamer is about to be transferred to the "Eagle-line" of Australian packeters belonging to her present owners, Messrs. Bright & Co., Liverpool. She is estimated to cost £100,000, and will be fitted up for the service of the Royal Mail.

Port Phillip, on the 1st of August next. She will carry three classes of passengers—upper saloon, twenty guineas; fore saloon, forty guineas; second cabin, twenty-five guineas. The Great Britain will have accommodation for about 1,000 passengers.

The Italian fleet for the women of Bristol and Clevedon to the Queen, will be sent to the port of inspection, measured upwards of 100 hundred and forty lengths in length, and contained the enormous num- ber of 25,800 signatures.

THE QUEEN'S PROCLAMATION.—It is with a slight satisfaction we learn that the very numerous and repulsive-looking individuals whom we have observed parading the streets of London during the last year in priestly costume, are, in future to be restrained from making their appearance out doors. We were extremely sorry, even in imagination, to think of all the trouble which would be caused by these obnoxious things in black, white, and white-bordered—black monks: as we understand an importation might shortly be expected, in order to familiarise the public with such an appearance prior to the arrival of the real ecclesiastic.

We certainly think that a simpler method might have been found of dealing with these queer characters. Supposing they had been treated like the unfortunate Magdalenes, and delivered over to the care of the police, and the ill-favoured ecclesiastic that the consummate Opiate! What sport would a razzia of Opticianists have made of them? But Hartwick seems to have half as stern in his petty condemnation of these beings of the obscene gender as he is when a full daughter of Eve is dragged by thirties blue-bottle flies before his eyes. His proclamation would soon be too hot for his host, and his host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was intended to have a safe passage for Roman Catholic Bishop took part, and they sent a friendly intimation to the bishops pointing out to him the provision of the statute of George IV., and expressing a hope that he would not act in accordance with its spirit. He replied that he would not do so, but that it was his duty to obey the Queen's proclamation.

He further said that he would host of martyrs, and a Queen's proclamation would be just as much needed to destroy a nest of vixens, or stop the propagation of adders in any part of Her Majesty's dominions.—British Army Report.

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, on the 17th ult., Mr. Keogh, in reference to the Proclamation, inquired if it was