March 2, 1903 Died March 2, 1903. Can it be he ne'er will greet us In this earthly home again, And that voice so strong and loving We must listen for in vain?

Kindness stamped his every action To his parents, friends and home; Noble deeds and genial bearing Leaves the silence still more lone.

Floral tributes o'er the casket From companions where he died Gave a solemn sweet expression Of a friendship true and tried.

We have laid him in the churchyard And our hearts seem there to stay— Jesus Saviour only comfort Lift our thoughts to Thee we pray. Yes we trust his name was written In the Lamb's bright Book of Life Now with God safe safe forever Far beyond all earthly strife.

Year's ago God's spirit called him And His power and love made known; He accepted that salvation Which by faith can save alone. And the promise still abideth:
"I'll be with thee to the end."
Though the waves may roll as billows,
Christ is still the sinner's friend.

Leading onward through this time state, Upward to that higher mark; Safely through a dreary pathway Oft His providence seems dark. Still that voice sounds down the ages: Mourner cast thy care on Me; When thy dear ones cross the river Jesus still is guiding thee.

So we turn with trembling footsteps
Leaning on that Strength divine;
Hoping by and by to meet him
In that blissful heavenly clime.

Frank's Winter elothes, and, at the sight of them, a wild idea flashed into her brain. She had spoken resolutely, but she had no more fancy for this nocturnal mission than any other girl of nineteen.

What if she were to put on Frank's clothes? She could then go with impunity. The idea grew upon her, and before many moments passed, the rose-shaded lamp revealed a boyish figure, clad in dark-green pantaloons and an English jacket, and a ace smiling at the reflection in the mirror. Once on the road, Betty started for Dr. Ducie's on a run. She had not taken an umbrella, because she felt it would im-of the buggy passed over Betty's ankle. A faint cry escaped her lips, for the pain of the thing almost made her sick. The doctor was beside her in an instant. 'Are you hurt?' he cried, with deep concern, going down on his knees in the dust. 'My ankle,' Betty moaned.

The doctor lifted her into the buggy, and irove rapidly back to the house. 'I ran over this young man, Mrs. Fry,' he said, as the housekeeper helped him carry Betty to a lounge. 'Get me some arnica and tre bandages, please.' The gentleman attending her was quite young. He had dark blue eyes, which were looking at her with kind solicitude, and a fine-looking face, which was partially concealed by a cu:ly golden beard and mas-'Where is Dr. Ducie?' she said, faintly. 'Out of town,' was his reply. 'I am Dr.

Please go to Valleyview as quickly as possible. One of Mrs. La Bree's servants has cut her arm, and is in danger of bleeding to death ' breathe a word of this to a living soul, Some weeks later, on the lawn at Valleyview, Betty might have been seen in a garden chair. She wore Frank's velvet smoking jacket; but over her knees she had thrown a linen afghan. Doctor Gwynn was there, and though he had told her she might walk a little, nothing in the world could have induced her to try it, since she would have been obliged to put on pantaloons. No, indeed. She would not stir a step till Dr Gwynn ceased attending her. But somehow Betty was in no hurry for that

Yes, it was four weeks since the night when she had gone on the mission which had involved her in such embarrassments. She had written again and again to her father and mother, telling them of unforeseen delays, etc., etc., till Mr. and Mrs. La Bree were quite out of patience. It was only what Betty had feared, when she saw her hrother Frank coming up the walk that

If only he would go into the house at once. But no. He saw her, and came towards her with a rollicking salute. 'Hello, Betty, my dear,' he cried, giving her a good hug. 'How d'ye do? What are you dressed in my jacket for?'

'Frank,' she said, struggling in his arms, 'there is a stranger here.' 'Oh, excuse me,' he said, as poor Betty tammered out the name of Dr. Gwynn. Fortunately, Miss La Bree caught sight of him from the library-window. 'Frank, Frank!' she cried. 'Come here. 'It seems I'm wanted,' he said. But he urned and called out:

'How's your foot, Betty?' Betty did not eply; but burst into tears. You must know it all now,' she said, chokingly. 'I'm not a-boy at all-Doctor Gwynn. I—I dressed up in Frank's clothes that night. I never did it before, and-and didn't think anyone would know. I rought it would be safer to go in that way.

Pl-please don't think I'm a dreadful girl, for Here Betty broke down completely, and Doctor Gwynn was obliged to draw her head down on his shoulder 'You foolish little thing,' he cried, his eves shining with fan, but more with tenerness. 'You thought I did not suspect. Do you suppose I did not know the moment I saw them, that these pretty hands and feet belonged to a woman? Betty, I have known it all along. Perhaps it would have been better for me if I hadn't, for I have learned to love you, my darlin, and I cannot be happy without you. Tell me—will you marry me, aweetheart?

Betty looked at him in the most abject astonishment, which, for the moment at fleed all other emotions. But gradually, as the significance of the words dawned on high a soft flush stole into her cheeks and here. eyes effected the tender light which in his own.

Will you marry me, Betty?
