LS OF THE CAPTURE OF ROME

LONDON, Sept 27 .- A correspondent of the "Tribune" with the Italian head quartes sends the following account of the taking of Rome. September 20th:—At 5 o'clock we heard the first shot of the battery that had been posted some 200 yards from the Villa of Cassilini, three miles north of Rome, and its aim was to open a breach on the right hand of Porta Pir There were two pieces of artillery opposite the gate of Porta Pia, and their object was to break the gate. Gen. Ferrer's artillery and Gen. Angelin, who came from Naples only a few hours before, were opening breaches and doing hard work near St. Giovanni and St. Lozenzo. The precision of the artillery was marvellous. The fire had been going on and a breach was half made when at the back of it we perceived that the house belonging to the Bonapartes had

At nine o'clock precisely, a shell fell on the roof of St. Agnes' church, smashed the ceiling and fell in the church. An order was immediately given to several soldiers to mount the top of the tower and hoist the white flag of the Ge neva Convention, as several wounded had already arrived. At half past ten, a strong fire of musketry was heard. The two cannon ceased firing, and in a few minutes firing entirely ceased, and the Zouaves had hoisted the white flag. A batallion of the Bersiglieri mounte the barricades, when those villians of Zouaves the harricades, when those vinears of Zodaves fired again, killing on the spot Patelieri, Major of the Batallion. Gen. Casseney, with his wounded arm, and his staff marched in front Ward 2 sword in hand, to the barricades, and the Forty first Regiment of infantry followed.

A few hours afterwards his mother was looking among the ranks of the 41st for her son, but not one had the courage to tell her the word of the sad fate he had met. The soldiers mount the barricades with jolly faces and the Colonel of the regiment rides to the very top of the barricade. He has a cigar in his mouth, looks proudly on his soldiers, and little cares for the bullets whistling about

The troops have occupied the gates: the Papal artillery has surrendered, and the firing has ceased. The 30th regiment are still waiting orders to occupy the town of Piazza de Termini. It is full of Papal artillery, and a regiment of Zouaves and a squadron of cavalry are there. They are all armed and know no what to do. The Italian soldiers run to the Papal captain and summon him to surrender The 41st arrive, and the Zouaves and the rest of them are disarmed. The people begin to pour in from every quarter with tri-coloured flags in their hands, shouting like mad for the King and the army

A batallion of Papal troops made up of convicts, robbers and the worst criminals, organized for the defence of the Pope, fortified them-selves in a square of the capital, for fear of being massacred by the people. They fired three times from behind a mattrass barricade, but without doing any harm, and were all made prisoners by an Italian regiment, which took them in the rear.
