

Teddie bear brutality occurs again

The annual Harp Teddie Bear Hunt got under way on the St. John River this past week despite condemnation from the Groin Piece Foundation.

A spokesperson for the Groin Piece Foundation, Brian Rabies made it clear he and his foundation was "Dead set against the hunt". Rabies claims that "it is disgusting to see those cute cuddly little creatures being massacred by those big burly monsters for the sole purposes of putting their furry little skins on peoples coats like the one my wife has — strike that last remark!" After being assured his remarks were off the record he went on to say, "I mean we are objecting to their brutal methods. Their violent malicious, savage, brutal methods remind me of Parti Quebecois back benchers. We of the Liberal Par- I mean the Groin Piece Foundation find killing those cute furry little creatures of God offensive to the rest of Mankind."

The hunt got underway when the hunter forces were mobilised. The hunters went on to the ice with clubs, knives, spears, guns, an artillery section and one small atom bomb for protection from Big Daddy Bears.

Hunters enjoy the thrill of the hunt on the ice flows of the St. John river last week

Fred 'Fishy' Fishnet, spokesperson for the Federation of Atlantic Region Teddies (FART) does not agree with Mr. Rabies remarks. "We of FART feel that Rabies is full of hot air. The methods we use are not inhumane."

When queried as to what his methods were Fishnet said "Well, we just bash the little buggers over the head and then skin them alive if they're still alive that is." When asked if this wasn't just a bit violent Fishnet replied, "No, it's kind of fun. Anyway the youngsters find it very educational for their biology classes."

When asked about the recent move of his head offices to the Alaskan Teddie Bear Building in Philadelphia he replied "we've been planning the move for some years now." When reminded that his foundation has only been in existence for six months he retorted, "What are you, some kind of wierdo hassling me when those murderers are out on the ice killing those cute cuddly creatures of God."

Mr. Fishnet went on to say that the Fisherman needed the hunt as it constitutes 50 per cent of their annual income. He also claimed that it "gives the byes a relief from four months of der pogie. Getting out onto the ice and bashing a few heads every winter really gets it out of the system. Four months with the wife can drive any man insane."

Foreign countries have condemned Canada for condoning the hunt. Japanese Foreign minister Watanabe was quoted as saying, "the slaughter of the teddie bears must stop or the herds will be wiped out. You don't see our whaling boats killing every whale in sight do you? Or do you? Well anyway as soon as they're all killed off they won't be bumping into our Tuna boats."

drowned

Recent as 1962 note that the cannon was used in the basement for the filing of letters to the president from students and requests for more money from various departments. As a final note, the last known and documented use of the cannon was by the present president of the university, Dr. J.M. Sanderson who used it in conjunction with experiments to put salmon into space. The STUN is offering a reward of 5 lbs. of salmon to the person who can accurately account for the whereabouts of the cannon or of Dr. Sanderson.

Hartfool not gay, just slightly giddy

Recent allegations concerning remarks directed against Premier Richard Hartfool's character were denied by the premier at a press conference held at the Lord Beaverless Brook Room.

Accompanied by several young aides from his cabinet Hartfool denied allegations that he had homosexual tendencies. The girl I'm living with is not leaving me because I'm queer" said the premier who said his girlfriend was leaving because of the way he cut his toe nails.

Premier Hartfool said that it was true he wore a lot of makeup but "after all, you never know when television cameras may turn up". He also replied to accusations by the Liberal opposition party to the effect that he had been seen "kissing one of his aides in the men's bathroom".

My aide was feeling faint and I was giving artificial respiration" said the premier.

The premier was wearing a conservatively cut knee length skirt at the conference and said he was wearing it because he was attempting to cut back on expenses and he picked up this number from a second hand women's clothing sale. He did say the material of the skirt was excellent.

Premier Hartfool also spoke emphatically against people who slandered his character in reference to his closeness to his mother. "Just because I phone her six or seven times a day and run over every night for a good night kiss is no reason to slander me". "In addition my mother does not always help me make governmental decisions only the ones which affect the entire province."

One student reporter from the student newspaper the Bumswickan said the premier had accosted several UNB football players at the Lord Beaverless Gym. The premier said he had not accosted them but was checking to see if recent reports of venereal disease were in fact as widespread as reported.

Premier Hartfool said that any of his aides present, although young (16-19) could vouch for his character. However, three were in the powder room, and the fourth seemed preoccupied with something under the table, and did not appear for several minutes. When the aide did appear, he said he had already had lunch, was not hungry and was sure that the premier's character was unassailed by any "silly men trying to accuse him of dirty, nasty things".

Gourmets delight

Fredericton residents were shocked recently by findings of the Fredericton City Police which showed that a large number of graves in the city have been robbed.

Chief of Police Lenord Pour-it-on said recently that over 115 graves have been discovered disturbed. He said that the bodies are no longer interred in the graves and that pieces of flesh and bone have sometimes been found "scattered about".

He said that police are mystified as to who the culprits are, but they do have suspects. He said all known necrophiliacs in the city are being "closely watched and a source from the University of New Brunswick Sociology department has hinted that the Anthropology department may have something to do with it. The source said that he "knows goddam well, those bloody anthropology peoples have been indulging". He felt that this could be due to recent cutbacks in the university budget, forcing the anthropologists to go off campus for their food studies.

Chief Pour-it-on said that while details of the grave robberies could not be released, he could give some facts. He said that the robbers seem to hit the history of grave robberies. He said that instead of using shovels, the culprits seem to rip open the earth unknown destination or to eat it on the spot.

Chief Pour-it-on said further details will be graves at night, when police are sleeping, and have a way of robbing the graves unique in the

with their fingernails and upon reaching the body, tear it from the coffin either to carry it to some forthcoming, but that he had to have lunch as he cleaned dirt from under his fingernails.

Boom Boom gets it

The excitement was too great for this week's winner in The STUN's Word Maze contest. Miss Boom-Boom LaTouche, 23 Bluejay Way, was the recipient of the $5 prize for her winning entry in the contest.

When notified of her good fortune, Miss LaTouche fainted and was admitted by several co-workers to the Delbert Chokers Hospital. Before entering extensive surgery for acute surprizitis, the winner gasped to our reporters, "I am so grateful to all you wonderful people... I've never won anything before in my life... Thank you, thank you, thank you..."

Reliable sources inform us that Miss LaTouche choked to death during surgery, so her $5 will go back into the jackpot, and next week's prize will be doubled to $10!

Mr. Bubbles White, 1164 Morning Glory Circle, was the runner up in this week's contest. "My dog did most of the puzzle," he admitted. "That's why it was stained yellow when you got it." Mr. White received his consolation prize which consisted of a Raquel Welch "Double Trouble" poster and a cheque for $5000 dollars. While not a greedy person, White said "anything that's free, I'll take it!! It was his first entry in the contest, although his wife has done the puzzles before but always forgotten to mail them. "I showed the bitch who's boss, didn't I?" he commented.

The STUN's prize-filled contest ends in two weeks, so get your entries in! Grand prize is a round-trip to Williamsburg, N.B., and the winner will be drawn from a large container. Good luck!

SALE FOR TAKING ALLY RAG own make it this newspaper longer