W. W. Everitt,

SAVAGE BLUEFISH.

THEY OUTRANK THE SHARK AND PIKE IN SHEER CRUELTY.

These Ferocious Marine Butchers Eat Nearly Half Their Own Weight Daily and When Gorged Kill Their Prey For Pure Sport.

The opinions which are current regarding the bluefish are usually formed in one of two ways. A long and pleasant acquaintance may be based on experience at the table. But this, after all, affords only a limited insight into the subject. Again, a man may, with wet and abraded fingers, haul in a five or six pounder until the latter is within a dozen feet of the boat and then see the agile and glistening creature jump out of the water, throw the hook from his mouth and return to the shades of private life. If a line that has a fisherman at one end and a bluefish at the other is not pulled in rapidly enough to stay taut, the consequences just suggested are likely to ensue, and a vivid but expiring exhibition of a bluefish's pluck and agility will be afforded. After all, though, nothing like a symmetrical and complete estimate of the character of a bluefish can be reached without an intimate knowledge of his private habits.

In spite of the favor with which this beautiful and spirited creature is generally regarded, those who have had a good chance to study him tell awful tales of his ferocity. The pike and shark enjoy rather undesired reputations in this respect. But a rigid and strictly judicial investigation of the facts warrants a suspicion that the bluefish outranks them both in sheer cruelty. Sharks are greedy and unprincipled enough, heaven knows. But it can at least be said in their behalf that they eat what they kill and are not given to slaughter out of pure succession. Some of them he swallows whole. Others he merely lacerates.

The fact that he had what is poetically called a square meal only 15 minutes before he puts no restraint on his murderous propensities. He snaps at the nearest moss-banker, takes a small morsel out of his unfortunate victim and leaves the rest of the morsel floating in the water for the sea gulls. The latter haunt the neighborhood of a band of marauding bluefish on this account and thus give the practiced fisherman a free tip regarding the whereabouts of his prey.

The main question is the fish and his extraordinary capacity. There is a limit, to be sure, to the capacity of the bluefish's stomach. And when that organ is filled he can't well stow away anything more there. All the same, he goes on playing Herod with the innocents that come within his reach. The finding of remnants of menhaden and other small fish in the water near a school of bluefish has given rise to the notion that, after having eaten all he can accommodate, the latter will disgorge, preparatory to fresh attacks. But considerable doubt attaches to the theory. It seems to be merely an inference from the debris found in the water near a school of bluefish. No one reports having witnessed the ejection of food from a fish's mouth.

The number of bluefish taken off the Jersey and Long Island coasts during a single season has been put up by a local fisherman at the rate of 1,000,000 and he makes this only 1 per cent of the total number swarming in the waters. He then expresses the opinion that no less than 2,500,000,000 pounds of menhaden are eaten by bluefish daily, and that 2 1/2 pounds to a bluefish. If these figures are even approximately correct, the bluefish eats from a quarter to half his own weight in the course of 24 hours. It is impossible to find a parallel for this voracity among land carnivora. More than a dozen mossbankers have been found in the stomach of a bluefish. But on the theory that he only ate ten a day during a season of ten days the whole billion bluefish on the coast would get away with an appalling number of menhaden in a season of four months. Such a calculation emphasizes not only the destructiveness of the bluefish, but also the astonishing fecundity of his victims, which can endure that havoc without any apparent diminution.

They do say, however, that the bluefish will seek to kill himself on his human enemy if the opportunity offers. Not only will he bite fiercely while being removed from a fishhook, but he will actually attack a man in the water. If the following narrative is true, the originator of the story, one might be excused for entertaining misgivings as to its truthfulness, but the narrator is a submarine diver, and whoever knew a submarine diver to depart further than did George Washington from strict facts? So there is no discounting this story. Once upon a time, says the diver, he was entirely submerged and was engaged in adjusting some hoisting apparatus to a wreck. Along came a big bluefish, which, in a spirit of pure devilry, snapped at the man's bare hand. Its teeth came together like the jaws of a railway conductor's punch on a comedian's ticket. The diver tried to withdraw the imprisoned member, but in doing so mangled it badly. It thus appears that a bluefish does not confine his merciless attentions to mossbankers and such and has no reverence for the gifted creature which stands at the head of the animal creation. A man cannot be too careful, therefore, about controlling the conditions under which he meets this blood-thirsty demon of the deep.

Now They May Speak.

The children of a Maine lawyer were never allowed to speak to him when entering his office until he stopped his work and looked up at them. One day a little girl rushed into the office, but papa was busy and paid no attention for about five minutes, when he then looked up, and the little girl said, "Papa, the house is on fire." The house was on fire, as she had said, and ever since then the children are allowed to speak to papa anywhere or at any time.

Powley's Liquefied Ozone

Cures John W. Moyes, Manager of the Metropolitan Street Railway

Many people feel run down and they do not know what is the matter. They are troubled with headaches, tired feeling, had taste in the mouth on rising, foul breath and many other distressing symptoms. Now the worst possible thing to do is to take drugs or medicines. They only create a false stimulant which soon dies out. The only way to treat disease is to remove the cause. Now germs are the cause of all sickness and Powley's Liquefied Ozone, the new system of treatment kills germs. Thousands of testimonials have been received for Powley's Liquefied Ozone. Each testimonial can be investigated. In fact, investigation is invited. Read what Mr. John W. Moyes, Manager of the Metropolitan Street Railway, has to say: "The bottle of Ozone you left me is done, and I would like to see you and wish you would bring me another bottle. I am certainly feeling much better than when I saw you and purpose giving the medicine every chance to do me good. The same preparation as what I had from you is a convenient one for me, as being away so much, I can carry a suitable quantity with me and use it at any place I may be for a meal. Signed, Yours truly, JOHN W. MOYES, Toronto, Ont.

Mr. Moyes suffered from stomach disorders. Powley's Liquefied Ozone is $1.00 a large bottle, 50c small size. All druggists, or from the laboratories of the Ozone Co., of Toronto, Limited, 45 Colborne St., Toronto.

"I feel as if I should fly to pieces." How often those words are on a woman's lips. They express to the uttermost the nerve racked condition of the body, which makes life a daily martyrdom.

If this condition had come suddenly it would have been unbearable. But the transition was gradual. A little more strain each day on the nerves. A little more drain each day of the vitality. Any woman would be glad to be rid of such a condition. Every woman tries to be rid of it. Thousands of such women have been cured by Dr. Pierce's treatment, with his "Favorite Prescription" when local doctors had entirely failed to cure. "Favorite Prescription" contains no opium, cocaine or other narcotic.

THE YOUTH'S DESIRE.

Youth and love and a sunny sky. These are the things of the soul's desire: All else is but an empty cry. Ashes cold in the place of fire. Sing who may, but never fine things are. Never a heart that makes reply. Like that which thrills to the voice that sings Of youth and love and a sunny sky!

Youth and love and a sunny sky. What is the rest but an idle dream? Though all else come as the years pass by, But know there's naught like one sweet day. Of youth and love and a sunny sky! —Ripley B. Saunders in St. Louis Republic.

THEY LIKE WALL STREET.

Fakirs and Peddlers of Novelties Find It a Bonanza.

"What is the best stand for you?" was asked of the man who was selling a new kind of pencil. His answer was a surprise.

"Wall street," he said promptly. "We all like to get there. Those brokers will buy anything. The fakir it is the fakir to them. You can be selling tin cuff buttons and studs, a whole set for a nickel, warranted silver, and they'll come along and buy. It may be a variety of cheap bling-bling, or a new variety of beads, or a hair dye, or a Chinese puzzle, or a set of sticks, or any old thing, it doesn't matter what it is, they'll bite."

"They are the easiest marks in town. Every enterprising fellow knows that. Fakirs and peddlers of novelties. One of them the other day had a lot of red cotton handkerchiefs like the negroes down south call bandannas. His stand was down on Essex street, but business was dull, and he trudged down to Wall street. Pretty soon along came a dude broker and spied those red handkerchiefs. He got a handful. Another one saw him and invested. They kept that up for an hour, and then the fellow rolled off an empty cart. What did they want with them? I don't know. Neither did they. I suppose they were up to a joke. They're always joking."

"They're always on the lookout for novelties. They are especially fond of a new toy. Those elastic pigs went like hot cakes down there. So did summer sneakers, the green, natural, wicked looking kind that fool chorus girls and politicians. Another thing that had a great sale was a handsome looking penstand and pen. 'Pure aluminum,' the seller said.

"It was fixed on a nice little card, on which was printed in red letters, 'Warranted by the manufacturer.' That looked and sounded imposing. The manufacturer was very careful to keep his name off the card. Possibly that was because he knew the thing would turn out to be a dud. The peddler found that out and had to get rid of his stock in one day. It wouldn't keep. So he tried it on Wall street, and they cleaned him out in an hour. They like pen stands down there too. You'd think the stock market would keep them guessing enough, but it doesn't seem to.

"The hardest place to fool people is on the east side down town. You can afford to over there if you're really got a good thing, cheap—a real bargain. If you haven't, keep away. They don't have much money, and they're not wasting time by buying a dud. Besides, you can't fool them. They don't want toys, they don't want puzzles. They take life seriously. They have a weakness for pocket-books, visiting cards written with big flowers, collar buttons, handkerchiefs, knives and suspenders.

"When you have trinkets and bare, hold fakes, take them to Wall street. There's where you'll find the suckers. The queer part is, they know they're getting a dud and like it. It's no place for an honest man with useful articles. He can sell there all day and never find a buyer. But the blooming fraud that jolies them—he'll get their money every day. When they bought a wagon load of that endless chain business down there one day. Every one that came along was pulling one in his fingers and trying to fool his neighbor. They're a queer lot, and they want to be taken in."

A Story of Dr. Gull.

When the Prince of Wales some years ago was attacked with illness which elicited worldwide sympathy for him, the services of Sir William Jenner were for some reason which I forget not available, and Dr. Gull, then on the rising curve of his career, was sent for.

The Duke of Edinburgh on arriving in hot haste to see his stricken brother was somewhat concerned to find a medical man in attendance who was a stranger to him. He proposed to put to Gull a host of questions with regard to the illustrious patient, his condition, treatment, prospects of recovery, etc.

Dr. Gull in that somewhat heavy, ponderous manner which those who knew him well will remember walked over to a writing table, drew a sheet of paper to ward him and proceeded to inscribe in his remarkable calligraphy, which was, like his manner, somewhat ponderous, certain words. He then handed the paper solemnly to the Sillor Prince, who read the familiar warning, "You are requested not to speak to the man at the wheel."—London Sketch.

The Candid Fiddler.

A story is told concerning the late Duke of Coburg, whose enthusiastic love of the violin was so well known. Some years ago Prince Alfred invited a well known London professor to play upon his "Strad," but the musician insisted upon the royal host leading the way. This the duke did, after which the professor played a masterpiece.

"Do you know," said the duke, "I had no idea there was so much music in that instrument until I heard you perform?"

"Quite possible, your royal highness," came the ready, somewhat candid reply. "Neither did I."

This is one of the stories, it is said, that the late duke delighted to tell.—London Chronicle.
