(BY SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.)

CHAPTER XI.-(Continued.) Nothing could have saved him. except the remarkable strength and activity of the noble horse which he had won on the preceding day.

This stood him in the more stead, as the horse of Bois-Guilbert was wounded, and those of Front-de-Bouf and Athelstane were both tired with the weight of their gigantic masters, clad in complete armor, and with the preceding exertions of the day. The masterly horsemanship of the Disinherited Knight, and the activity of the noble animal which he mounted, enabled him for a few minutes to keep at sword's pcint his three antagonists, turning and wheeling with the agility of a hawk upon the wing, keeping his enemies as far separate as he could, and rushing

But although the lists rang with lows and to produce a good honest the applauses of his dexterity, it suit of clothes or parts thereof at was evident that he must at last be overpowered; and the nobles around Prince John implored him with one voice to throw down his warder, and to save so brave a knight from the disgrace of being overcome by odds.

"Not I, by the light of Heaven!" answered Prince John; "this same SCOTCH TWEEDS, springal, who conceals his name, Lastly we would respectfully solicit the and despises our proffered hospitattention of our patrons to our stock of ality, has already gained one prize, GERMAN CLOTHS.VENETIANS and may now afford to let others have their turn." As he spoke thus, an unexpected incident changed the fortune of the day. There was among the ranks of the Disinherited Knight a champion in black armor, mounted on a black horse, large of size, tall, and to all appearance powerful and strong, like the rider by whom he kind, had hitherto evinced very little interest in the event of the those combatants who attacked him, but neither pursuing his advantages, nor himself assailing any one. In short, he had hitherto acted the part of rather of a spectator than of a party in the tournament, a circumstance which procured him among the spectators the name THE undersigned may still be found of Le Noir Faineant, or the Black
