LEADERSHIP PROGNOSTICATIONS. pes from Ottawa are to the effect Conservative party leaders have, he past day or two, apent all their e in caucusing over the leadership. r is still expressed why the Goveral has not followed British and sent for someone to form ament. The wonder will have Lord Stanley sees fit to move.

made evident on all hands that greatest diversity of opinion mong the Conservative leaders as to what course should be pursued. There are so many antagonistic elements to reconcile, so many ambitious men to satisfy, and no man of overpowering personality to control and

Booms have been started for this man and for that, but only to collapse after the elements of weakness are laid bare, as they freely are by candid friends, who themselves have axes to grind.

One thing seems now certain, and that is the determination of Sir Hector Langevin not to be squeezed out of the leading place A Conservative correspondent tells us that Sir Hector will first be sent for, and that he will refuse the task of forming a Ministry, nominating Sir John Thompson. He will also decline, we are next informed, and suggest Mr. Abbott. We are left in the dark as to what he will do. Mr. McCarthy, it is noted, does not wish to enter the Cabinet, but he desires to be kingmaker, and is booming Mr. Meredith. Toronto World, a good Conservative authority, candidly tell its readers that the funeral journey to Kingston will be ntilized for a meeting between Mr. Meredith and Sir John Thompson, with the object of promoting Mr. Meredith's

The multitude of rumors and the as gurance that the new Government will at sest be a make-shift to tide over the session all betoken the chaos that reigns and portends the break-up that must bring a needed change. No wonder that the Montreal Star advises those Conservatives who are looking for jobs from the present managers at Ottawa to get them now, lest they escape their grasp.

AFTER THE VERDICT.

Sir William Gordon Cumming Com-

Mahomedan carrying his praying carpet.

The Telegraph defends the Prince, although regarding him as indiscreet, but thinks a generous world will forgive him for signing the paper of condonation.

The Chronicle condems the jury's finding and the partiality of Chief Justice Coleridge. Cummings, it says, is not the first loyal Scot made to feel the ban of the Prince's ingratitude. The paper asks what steps will be taken to windicate justice in regard to the crime which the Prince compounded by signing a compact with Cumming or whether the scandal will be forever bushed up.

The Standard (Tory) says that if the plaintiffs come worst out of the affair it must be admitted that the defendants and to it friends are somewhat tarnished.

To a friend who asked Sir William what thought of the verdict, that gentleman it if if wit was not of course what I hoped for or expected, but you may say that I tribute it entirely to the biased and equidiced summing up of the Lord Chief stice. I have been told on what I believe the good authority that Lord Coleridge intimated to several people before the trial the there was no doubt as to my guilt. It coked bad also that the Prince of Wales, who is bitterly hostile to me, should lunch every day with the Chief Justice. Does anybody believe that the refrained from discussing the case?

teeping silent, but I would not listen to my such proposition."

Speaking of his marriage Sir William said: If have been engaged to Miss Garner for ome time. When this Tranby Croft busiess first came up I urged her to break off the engagement, but she said she was willing to marry immediately after the trial, hether the verdict was in my favor or not. The Cortege Proceeds to the Railway Station in a Deluge of Rain—The Arrival at Kingston.

OTTAWA, Ont., June 10.—The official portion of the funeral was hardly so long as was expected, though its expeditiousness may be due to the admirable way in which it was managed. It was eighteen minutes passing a given point. To this must be added the great concourse of sorrowing citizens who more than doubled it in numbers.

rowing citizens who more than doubled it in numbers.

The heavily plumed hearse was preceded by two cars of funeral flowers that loaded the air with a heavy scent. Rev. J. J. Bogart and Rev. Ven. Archdeacon Lauder rode in the carriage for the officiating clergy; his Excellency and suite just preceded Major-Gen. Herbert, commander of the Canadian militia. On either side of the hearse walked the Cabinet Ministers, who acted as pallbearers, and just inside of them six Dominion police who carried the casket. The Senate and the Commons followed, preceded each by their speakers and maces. This is a variation of the usual macer of precedence, which puts the Speaker of each House much higher in the procession than the ordinary members.

Two draped and terraced cars, each drawn by two black horses, bore the hundreds of floral offerings to the memory of the dead. The funeral car, surmounted by heavy sable plumes and drawn by four black horses, caused hundreds to murnin; "There goes the last of Sir John." Next to the mourners the Governor-General followed the body of his late adviser. For the first time in the history of the Dominion the maces of the Houses of Parliament were carried through the streets, and gave more than anything clice a State character to the funeral.

anything clse a State character to the funcal.

At the Church.

The altar at St. Alhan's Church, to which church the remains were conveyed, was set with bluish purple hangings trimmed with white silk with two bouquets in gold vases standing at either end. The base of the altar was surrounded with rows of tropical ferns, palms and similar hothouse plants, rich in their dark colors, the pulpit and other portions of the church being appropriately draped. The seat usually occupied by Sir John Macdonald, immediately in front of the reading desk in the second tier, held a device wrapped in purple silk and gold. There was a wreath of smilax on the entrance side and on the top of the device a superb cross fully two feet in length composed of white and cream roses, tulips and immortelles. It was the gift of the young ladies of St. Alban's Church. The heautiful burial service of the Church of England was rendered with perfection. The choir chanted the 39th and 90th psalms.
