Julius Casar" at the Grand. "Julius Cosaar" at the Grand.
Shakspeare's great tragedy "Julius Cosar" was produced last night by Charles Hanford's company at the Grand Opera House before a tair-sized andience. Owing to the absence of the company's own scenery elaborate stage effects had to be dispensed with, but that was only a trifling consideration to studious auditors. Though the cast was a large one the chief responsibility rested with the three principals, Charles Hanford, Bennett Matlack and E. Spencer, assuming respectively the roles bility rested with the three principals, Charles Hanford, Bennett Matlack and E. R. Spencer, assuming respectively the roles of Marc Antony, Marcus Brutus and Caius Cassius. Mr. Hanford gave Antony the graceful personality with which the author endows him and delived the sublime perorations at the assassination and over the body of Cæsar with a soulfulness and a dramatic execution that stamped him as an actor of high rank. The noble Brutus was admirably impersonated by Mr. Matlack, who unites a prepossessing form and lace with excellent artistic ability. His lines were rendered in a manner that evidenced an intelligent conception of the character and the power to present it faithfully. As the fiery Cassius, Mr. Spencer won golden opinions. His whole heart seemed to be in his work, and he had the dramatic fire to do justice to perhaps the most difficult role in the play. Miss Annie Winter made a charming page and spoke her words with meaning. The balance of the combination made a satisfactory background for the principals, though the rabble could have stood more training. The orchestra gave a select programme, duly appreciated.
