The story of Sir William Mulock's life reads like a romance embellished with many sad incidents. The son of an Irish gentleman, he was endowed with laudable ambitions, which must have seemed distant and almost beyond realization by reason of the extreme poverty of his youth. He nevertheless overcame the stubborn barriers which surrounded his early days. and by a splendid courage that should be a source of emulation to young men, supported and educated himself and finished a brilliant university course at the age of twenty, coming out finally as a gold medallist.
