These girls are not known to the police. They were up in the park on Saturday evening and on account of the rain took refuge in the stable. There was an exciting scene in Yorkville on Saturday evening. A gentleman, a lady and their child were out driving. Nearing Bloor street the buggy bumped against some obstacle and the driver was thrown out. The horse, a good big fellow, started off like a mad animal. The lady did not lose her presence of mind, but, gathering the child in her arms, reached for the reins, which she pulled so hard and steadily as to check the horse's pace sufficiently to allow a man in the crowd of onlookers to step out and stop it.

He has been cutting up pretty roughly this week past, and on Saturday evening a policeman who was passing the house heard the racket, but Michael triumphantly defied him to take him out of his house. The policeman, knowing that there was a war-rant at No. 3 for him, went over and got it. Michael was very crestfallen when the policeman returned with the document.

A Black Hole. The city council appointed a medical officer to look after the public health and remediate evils in the shape of nuisances. The biggest thing in this line that we know of at present is the cells at the central station. They are foul, unhealthy and unfit for a human being to inhabit, no matter how degraded he or she may be. The odor that arises from this black hole is vile in the extreme. A pleasant social gathering took place of Saturday last at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. David Burnside, 205 Beverley street, in commemoration of the fittieth anniversary of their marriage. In the afternoon their grandchildren assembled, and presented them with an elegant French clock accompanied by a suitable address, the eldest, Miss Inez McPherson, making the presentation. Subsequently the sons and daughters handed their parents, through Mr. J. T. M. Burnside, a purse containing gold coins, a diamond ring, and other articles of jewelry. The happy occasion was further commemorated by the christening of the youngest grandchild, Ina Burnside Gage, daughter of Mr. W. J. Gage. Mr. Burnside, sr., is now in his seventy-eighth year, and came to Canada in 1864 from Dingwall, Scotland, where he was principal of the academy at that place. He is fellow of the Educational institute of Scotland, and at Glasgow university he was a student in the same class as the late archbishop of Canterbury, Rt. Rev. Dr. Tait, with whom he was on intimate terms of friendship. Out of sixteen children eight are now living, and there have been thirty-four grandchildren. on dominion day, observed:

The onward march of Canadianism is steady, definite and satisfactory.

We are going to become a distinct and independent commonwealth, partly because it is our natural destiny, partly because in any of us are striving to schieve that destiny, and partly because those who oppose it are every day decreasing in numbers, in influence and in the merit of their contention.

While those who advocate the realization of our aspiration to true nationality are swelling in numbers, in prestige, in activity.

The young blood of the nation has a national throb.

Our older publicists—journalists, legislators, politicians—may denounce or ignore the idea of Canadian independence, but the youth of the land are in thorough sympathy with it.

There is a new generation springing up since confederation and they know only one country, and that is Canada, and only one political aspiration and that is the realization of her true destiny.

All of which is perfectly correct, and with which we concur. So long as the

with which we concur. So long as the country continues under the domination of a lot of old men who are living in the past. country continues under the domination of a lot of old men who are living in the past. there can be little hope for Canada. Not until the young men of the new generation succeed in pushing to the front, will there be any improvement. The old prejudice against young men occupying leading positions is breaking, and in time will be dispelled. The changes of the last twenty years are marvellous. Few men have the faculty of changing or modifying their views. The opinions formed in youth are generally maintained through life. In the old times, when the world moved slowly, and one set of views would stand good for at least a life time, the old man rule was was all very well. But now-adays we move by steam and bottled lightning, and and the views that are sound in '82 are abandoned in '83. Men who today are fifty or sixty years of age, obtained their views thirty or forty years ago, and for a young growing country like Canada to be governed in '83 by the men of 1840 is simply monstrous. The period for the old man rule has passed. What is needed is a general sweep of all the old heads, and their places filled by the new generation; that new generation in turn to be thrown to one side at the age of 40. The country cannot afford to use any but the brightest one side at the age of 40. The country cannot afford to use any but the brightest intellect, in its fullest vigor, and only whilst it is in full harmony with the spirit

LANGTRY AND HER FAG.

A New York letter says: Speaking of ersonal attractiveness, Mrs. Langtry is not out of sight of New Yorkers, though she may have dropped out of mind with other people. She rides down to the races of the oney Island jockey club atop of Freddie Gebhardt's four-in-hand coach, and sits no less conspicuously in his box after she gets to the course. A close observation of the pair together on a race day convinced me that Fred was very deeply in love with her, and that she didn't care a flip for him. She ooked more nearly beautiful, as compared with the women about her, than I had ever seen her on the stage, for her wondrously mooth skin and delicate complexion suffered nothing from the glare of midday sunlight. She wore a becoming dress of brown China silk o a female expert informed me, made up with a figured material of the same texture. On her head was a turban of a like shade in straw, trimmed with mull to match. Her gloves were tan-color, undressed kid, her tan and parasol were like the figured portion of her dress, and altogether she had a much more tasteful appearance than is often achieved by an English woman. She might readily have been mistaken for a Parisian or a New Yorker. Freddie had horses in the races, but her interest did not seem to be confined to them, and her manner of watching the contests, as well as her comments upon them, proved that under favoring circumstances a slow, rural, clergyman's daughter may acquire exact knowledge about the rapid diversions of the wicked world. Freddie was handsome, too, in a gray suit and white high hat. He looked younger than his sweetheart, and is so, I believe, by nine years.

A man with a back like a turtle and a face like a boiled lobster joined her in the box during Freddie's absence, and chatted with her. He looked as though he ought to be a turfman, but I recognized him as a theatrical speculator. Their talk was mainly about her next season's tour, and what she said was unsentimental enough, to the content of the c n straw, trimmed with mull to match.

what she said was unsentimental enough, for it revealed her overwhelming vanity in the prediction that she would make as much money as in last winter's tour.
When Freddie returned and she showed no disposition to dismiss this fat man in a hurry, he got so jeslously angry that his state of mind was visible in his face. Mrs.

state of mind was visible in his face. Mrs. Langtry smiled covertly, and seemed to enjoy his discomfiture greatly.

But the Lily had her own turn at anger. After the races were over Freddie took her to his coach, and on the way had to pass close by the crowd in the field. The couple were recognized, as they had immediate good reason to realize. Such hooting, yelling and whistling, mingled with disrespectful utterances, they had never encountered in all their varied public experiences together. The Lily had been straight on her stalk under the scrutiny of thousands of eyes while in the stand, though many of them looked straight at her through field glasses; but she wilted under this rude treatment, clung to Freddie's arm, and hastened away.

Do You Expect a Cure? If so, don't delay too long. We have cured hundreds of patients suffering from consumption bronchitis, laryngitis, asthma, catarrh and catarrhal deafness, who could not have been helped had they delayed one month longer. And we have refused treatment to over 100 cases during the last year who delayed one month too long. By the use of cold inhalations conveyed to the diseased parts by the spirometer, the wonde ful invention of Dr. M.
