

The Canadian climate is remarkable for being favourable to health and longevity, there is not so much of ague as some people are led to believe; I do not remember having seen one case during all my travels. There is an absence of colds, coughs, asthmas and rheumatisms, that afflicts us at home so frequently.

The emigrant on arriving at Quebec, will experience much satisfaction in having attention shown, and good advice given to him by the government agent, A. C. Buchanan Esq., Hunt's Wharf, who is appointed chief Emigration Agent for Lower Canada, and stationed at Quebec, for the purpose of giving all information and advice gratis. Emigrant ships upon arriving about 36 miles below Quebec, are boarded by the authorities of the quarantine department, on an island of the St. Lawrence, called Grosse Isle. A medical officer examines the ship, as to the state of health of all on board, and those who are sick are taken on shore to a hospital. Mr. Buchanan is apprised of the approach of vessels with emigrants, and is in waiting to receive them in the river opposite Quebec on board the vessels, or at his office. Strangers ought not to believe any statements that may be made to them by parties who put themselves in their way, for the purpose of taking advantage of them. There are besides Mr. Buchanan, other agents at the following places: A. Coulon, Esq., Canal Wharf, Montreal; A. B. Hawke, Esq., Junr., Kingston; A. B. Hawke, Esq., Sen., Scott Street, Toronto.

Steamers leave Quebec for Montreal, every afternoon at 5 o'clock, calling at the town of Three Rivers, Port St. Francois and Sorel, and arrive at Montreal, from six to seven next morning. For those parties whose destination is further west, they can proceed on their journey without much loss of time, as there are several steam
