Baby Discipline

It is perfectly safe to say that every ime. It is absolutely certain that some time, from some source, in some way, he Costumes combining net and silk are will receive his share of the world's discipline. In babyhood it is light, later it is severe. In babyhood there are no bac habits to combat: later the habits are a part of the child. In babyhood the grief is soon forgotten: later, humiliation and resenument live in the neart, and ofter resenument live in the neart, and often embitter the dearest ties. In view of these truths, the fact that we do not wish to punish the baby becomes the chief reason why we ought to discipline him. If we wait until we wish to punish nim, our own motives are degrading. What should be educational becomes retallation: and neither our judgment nor our justice is to be trusted.

There is nothing more beautiful than a baby just learning to talk and beginning to run about. He has so many charming ways, and each new accomplishment is so absorbingly interesting. At the very worst, his misdemeanors do not irritate us, and usually they are very funny.

not irritate us, and usually they are very funny.

It is far pleasanter and easier to divert the child's attention from wrong-doing than to take him seriously; and so, since there is no good stopping-place, he is coaxed and indulged until he is no longer a baby. Then we find that the habits that were amusing in the two-year-old cease to be funny at four or five, and at seven or eight they begin to be unendurable. It is a sad fact that punishment usually begins at an age when there should be no further occasion for it, and when it often does more harm than good. As the baby faults grow more and more irritating, the child himself grows less and less appealing. We can punish now, and we do. We are sure that "a child of his age ought to know better," tho just why, it might be hard to explain. It is surely no fault of the child that seven-year-old naughtiness is less attractive than that of bebyhood, and habit you know is a powerful antagonist.

out a fine strain of seed and sow those seeds right away. Next year your plants will be gorgeous.

The poppies are entrancing blossoms to study. They are ever beautiful from the up-sending of the first lovely indented leaves, thru the graceful bud-time (have you ever watched the poppy buds?) thru blossom time, and nonetheless thru seed-time.

thru blossom time, and nonetheless thru seed-time.

The forming of the poppy capsule is a mysterious thing. I would ask my gardeners to study carefully the plant thru this seed-capsule forming time. Note the great wobbly head, crowned with its fluted ring of green. Wonder how the frail stem supports that strange uncouth-looking head. Watch how the shimmering pale green shell grows thinner and thinner until in its own time it becomes not even a shell, not even a veil, but vanishes in the night.

A satisfying and strange study is the poppy.

Then there are the perennial popples. Do you know the oriental Poppy Papaver Orientalis? This is one of our most stately and magnificent of all the inmates of the herbaceous border. A true Persian from the sunny sands of the land of the lion and the sun, Orientalis Papaver is a real barbarian, reveling in colors outre, and textures as frail as the dawn and as vanishing.

This perennal sends up one or more single blossoms, from three to four to five inches across, each blossom terminal, swaying as a burning crown held aloft to be the slenderest stem, easily surpassing every other blossom in its neighborhood, in beauty and regal splendor. Just think of a plant five to six feet tall, sending up flower stems ten to twenty in number, each blossom flaming glorious orange red-brown, purple-hearted, bending stately as the turk it is, to every passing breeze, ever dignified proud aloof, and inscrutable. That is Papaver Orientalis.

These orientals are best raised from seed sewn in your own plots. To raise these plants is not a great task. Just
