Some writers declare there is favoritism against the colonies because lawyers of the Australian states which do not classify lawyers are not permitted to argue cases in British courts, as only barristers untainted by solicitors' work have that right. Another grevance is permitting a foreigner, who technically is unqualified for the work, "to take while playing on railway tracks, as me Bullock, aged 5, was run over lish man," as without this special privilege given Mr. Beck, some erninent British lawyer would reap the good fees presumably attached to this particular case.
