Chief Justice Wetmore, in response to a call from the chancellor, made a brief reply thanking them for the honor done him. He said that he had received honors from other sources during the past few months, but there were none he appreciated more than the degree of Doctor of Laws from his Alma Mater. He spoke a few minutes in connection with his school and college days in Fredericton and expressed regret at the unavoidable absence of Governor Bulyea, who was elected Chief Justice Wetmore.

he pointed out there was room for still greater improvement in the way of the broadening of human thought. It was important that a college should turn out scholars and thinkers, men who will assist in the making of a nation greater. The true university will always give great prominence to the principles of high learning and to social and national problems. No one can contribute more to national stability than the scholar. It is all very well to be equipped for living in the present, but one should have a brief history outline of the movement which has brought the world up to the standard of today.

The speaker referred to the application of science to industry, as the essence of technical education, and went on to say that in the Western University two-thirds of the student body were enrolled in the department of applied science. He said it was quite evident that but for the generosity of Sir Wm. Macdonald, Canada would not have had the example of technical education that it is. He thought the only way to benefit industry by education is to furnish the most sound, scientific training in the colleges.

He spoke of the great progress made in Germany along the lines of technical education and claimed that the example of that country was one worthy of emulation. Principal Peterson also spoke of the great importance of agricultural knowledge and in this connection referred to what was being done for the training and development of teachers at the Agricultural College. He believed that the work of training the teachers was one of the most important functions in connection with modern education. There are few people, he said, who realize how much the future of the country depends upon the teachers in elementary schools.

In closing his remarks, Principal Peterson spoke a few words of advice to the graduating class. He hoped that they would be able to do their part in the world they had acquired with them into the active duties of life. They should not think that having graduated from college they were entitled to sit back and let the world pass by. They should be ready to take up their share of the burden of the world. He said that he had received honors from other sources during the past few months, but there were none he appreciated more than the degree of Doctor of Laws from his Alma Mater.
